TO THE

PUBLIC.

THE following papers were firſt publiſhed ſeparately in the Gazetteer, in the years 1768-9. Such of them as were entirely of a public nature are now reprinted together; and, for the ſubject, may be conſidered as complete. The very few which followed in the original publication, being rather on ſubjects not intereſting now, would be thought undeſerving of regard.

The matters of which theſe letters treat are undoubtedly of great conſequence, being a very important branch of our national trade, and the preſervation and adminiſtration of ſuch acquired territories, as would be ſufficient to conſtitute a great kingdom.

The Author of them, whoever he be, has taken much pains to expoſe the ignorance and guilt of ſome paſt Adminiſtrations, the venality and ſubſerviency of Parliaments, and the frauds and corruptions of Eaſt-India Directors, in the many powers of abuſe which have been granted on one ſide, and acquired on the other: inſomuch, that the conſtitution has been repeatedly violated; the rights of the people invaded, or ſacrificed; the intereſt of the kingdom miſtaken, or betrayed; and, in fine, that property of the ſtate injurioufly bargained for, which probably may ſoon be endangered by the inabilities, or worſe, of thoſe who have acquired a power to miſmanage it. He likewiſe points out many imperfections in the conſtitution of the Company, and alſo various abuſes which have already been practiſed; (as well as others that rationally may be expected hereafter to be introduced) which, in their conſequences, have already produced, and naturally muſt continue to produce fatal effects to thoſe countries, as they likewiſe may do to this kingdom, if adequate remedies be not timely diſcovered and applied.

Our national affairs were lately thought to be in ſo critical a ſituation, as greatly to affect public credit and the funds: and thoſe of the Company, in India at leaſt, are generally believed to be in ſuch at preſent; chiefly from the many acts of tyranny, rapine, oppreſſion, injuſtice, and violence that have of late been practiſed, as well with regard to many ſubjects of this kingdom, as to the miſerable and helpleſs natives and others. It is, therefore, high time for the proprietors of India Stock, and the people of this kingdom at large, but ſtill more particularly for the legiſlature, to think ſeriouſly of theſe matters.

But as things are now circumſtanced with us, particularly in regard to our national debt and taxes, as well as the ſtate of our trade and condition of our finances, the conquered territories in India ſhould be conſidered as objects peculiarly intereſting: to ſtock-holders, for the the ſupport of dividends, and the value of their property, by ſecuring thoſe immenſe revenues from official depredations, groſs miſapplications, and the plunder of harpies, as well by diminutions of produce as from waſte; and to the general community, for having thoſe revenues ſo managed, as, that a far greater proportion than is at preſent, might be appropriated to the ſervice of the ſtate, for the eaſement of its burthens, by the diſcharge of public debts. In ſhort, if thoſe revenues are not honourably made the inſtruments of our national redemption, it is greatly to be feared, from the wicked uſes that may be made of them, they will prove fatal inſtruments of ruin both to the conſtitution and kingdom.

In a country of freedom, as this continues yet to be, the public intereſt and welfare are every man's concerns, becauſe he muſt in ſome degree partake in all the advantages or misfortunes of his country. On which conſiderations, theſe papers are now re-publiſhed, as they contain much information which may be uſeful at this time, when there is the probability of a ſerious parliamentary enquiry into theſe very momentous matters; of the neceſſity of which, as the nation appears to be fully convinced, ſo we ſhould hope it will prove effectual, for ſatisfactorily anſwering every wiſe and good purpoſe that can be expected from the undertaking.

NUMBER I.

Nov. 15, 1768.

THE preſent ſtate of the nation, as it is delineated in a pamphlet publiſhed under that title, contains ſuch truths as cannot but alarm the apprehenſions, not only of thoſe who yet feel affection for their country, but of thoſe alſo who love themſelves alone. What adds to this formidable repreſentation of things is this circumſtance, that the difficulties and diſtreſſes under which we labour and are oppreſſed, appear to be irremediable by thoſe means which the author of the preceding pamphlet hath propoſed. But, that I may not be arraigned with having advanced this aſſertion on inſufficient reaſons, I ſhall tranſcribe the following paſſage from the publication above-mentioned, and attempt to evince the impracticability of effecting the ends of paying off the national debt, by the ſyſtem which the writer of it has laid down.

" The charge upon the ſinking fund for the ſupport of the peace-eſtabliſhment, being thus reduced to ſo ſmall a ſum as 348,000l. ſhould that fund continue to produce, as it has done upon the loweſt medium ſince the peace, there would remain to be taken from it upwards of 1,800,000l. to be applied in diſcharge of the public debts. An able finance miniſter, with ſuch a ſurplus in his hands, would not find it impracticable to induce the proprietors of the irredeemable four per cent. annuities, to ſubſcribe their terms, and take an intereſt of three per cent. immediately.

" That operation would add 200,000l. to the ſurplus of the ſinking fund; and when there were in it two millions, to be applied in diſcharge of debt, the difficulties of the nation might be ſaid to be over.

" Every payment of two millions would reduce the charge for intereſt 600,000l. and taxes to that amount might be redeemed and taken off the people of Great Britain, in every year, while peace continued; and what nation in Europe would think of commencing war with her, when they ſaw her maintaining ſo formidable a peace-eſtabliſhment, and with a clear ſurplus revenue of two millions, with which to augment her forces on the firſt hoſtile appearance, without impoſing any new tax, or making any new loan.

" Every year of peace, if theſe meaſures were purſued, would bring with it a ſecurity for the continuance of the public tranquillity, as Great Britain would continually find freſh motives to preſerve it, and other ſtates would find it leſs ſafe to provoke her to a rupture with them."

As I have not entered upon the publication of this paper, through the leaſt inclination of differing in opinion from the author of The State of the Nation, but for the ſake of effecting thoſe purpoſes which he ſo ardently deſires, and to which his method muſt prove ineffectual, I ſhall make no objections to the firſt paragraph of the paſſage above tranſcribed, but conſider things in that ſtate in which he ſuppoſes that two millions a year, ſurplus, are actually running into the ſinking fund; and whether, in that ſituation, the difficulties of the nation may be ſaid to be over.

The

The national debt conſiſts of more than 140,000,000l. the ſinking fund ariſes from that ſurplus of the reſpective taxes which exceeds the intereſt of thoſe ſums of money for which they are mortgaged. Two millions per annum being the ſurplus of the ſinking fund, will therefore diſcharge 140,000,000 l. in ſeventy years; but then, in order to preſerve this ſurplus, all the taxes muſt be continued from which theſe two millions flow into that ſinking fund; for, without ſuch continuance, the paying off two millions, at the end of one year, will neceſſarily reſcind ſome part of the reſources which are to furniſh a like two millions in the next; and thus the diſcharging the national debt will avert the very means by which it is propoſed to be diſcharged. For example: On the three ſhillings per barrel duty on beer, impoſed in the year 1761, there were borrowed twelve millions, the intereſt of which amounts to 488,250l. per annum, as it is ſtated in the pamphlet. This duty of three ſhillings per barrel bringing in on a medium 500,000l. there remains a ſurplus of 11,750 l. which annually runs into the ſinking fund. Let us now ſuppoſe that the annual two millions be applied to the diſcharge of this tax on beer, the twelve millions will then be paid in ſix years; but at the ſame time the ſurplus which ariſes from that tax will gradually leſſen, as the debt is diſcharged, and at the end of ſix years, when the whole twelve millions are paid, the ſurplus of the ſinking fund will be reduced from two millions, to 1,988,250l. per annum. In this manner of leſſening the debts, the power of paying them muſt diminiſh alſo, through the whole courſe of their being diſcharged. The ſinking fund will therefore decreaſe with every payment of the taxes which ſupply it; thence it will reſult, though the ſurplus of every tax above the intereſt of the money for which it is engaged be not exactly ſimilar to the preceding on beer, that the time of liquidating the whole debt will be extended in proportion as the reſpective debts on thoſe particular duties are diſcharged, which conſtitute the exiſtence of the ſinking fund; and thus, inſtead of ſeventy years, it may be twice that number before the whole is paid off. For although the payment of every two millions will certainly reduce the charge for intereſt 60,000l. it is evident that taxes to that amount cannot be taken off in every year while peace continues, becauſe the two millions ſo applied, at the ſame time that they take off ſo much of the debt, take off alſo ſo much of the tax as contributes, by its amount, to form the ſurplus of two millions.

Whoever therefore ſhould pay off the national debt by diſcharging the ſums of money which are impoſed on the reſpective objects, which, by their exceſs beyond the intereſt for which they are engaged, create the ſinking fund, will reſemble that gardener, who ſhould cut off the great bearing branches of his trees, and ſtill expect the ſmall ones to produce as much fruit as before; or a farmer, who, intending to water his meadows by an overflowing of a ſtream, ſhould previouſly avert the ſource from whence it is derived.

Hence it evidently appears, that the two millions ariſing in the manner, and to be applied in the method propoſed in The State of the Nation, can never be produced by the ſinking fund, for a longer term than one year, if thoſe taxes are redeemed which gave that fund its exiſtence. The national debt will therefore take up an immenſe time in being thus diſcharged, and the difficulties of the nation cannot be ſaid to be over, ſhould that plan of payment be adopted by the nation.

It may be juſtly ſaid, that there are other taxes to be paid off, which either do not produce the full intereſt of thoſe ſums of money which have been borrowed of them, or only that ſum which is ſufficient to the intereſt; and therefore that ſuch may be diſcharged without leſſening the ſurplus of the ſinking fund. This is, indeed, an incontrovertible truth:

by paying off the debts on thoſe taxes which do not produce the intereſt of that money for which they were mortgaged, ariſes a removal of that tax, but the ſinking fund is as much increaſed as that tax was inadequate to the diſcharging the intereſt for which it was engaged, becauſe the deficiency of that tax was made up from that fund.

Thus, by paying off the money borrowed on the duties of Gum Senega, at 12,000 l. and producing but 2000 l. and on window-lights, eſtimated at 45,000 l. and producing but 2000 l. the nation will ſave all that is paid by the ſinking fund, to compenſate for the deficiency of the intereſt in the revenue ariſing from theſe taxes; and where the tax produces the intereſt, and no more, in that caſe, by the diſcharging of the debt, the ſinking fund can loſe nothing, and the people will be eaſed. But as there are no conſiderable number of taxes which do not produce a ſum exceeding the intereſt which they are deſtined to pay, the nation can receive no conſpicuous alleviation of her impoſt by theſe means, and when ſuch duties are redeemed, the ſame difficulty will recur in the diſcharging of thoſe taxes, the ſurplus of which runs into the ſinking fund, as hath been already related.

Beſides the preceding methods, there is yet another, in which the ſurplus of two millions may be applied towards the diſcharging of the national debt. For inſtance, thoſe two millions may be applied to purchaſe two millions of ſtock, the debt and tax ſtill ſubſiſting; and thus the nation, purchaſing from the individual ſtockholders their reſpective ſums in the funds, becomes debtor to the nation. In this manner, if it be ſuppoſed that the 12,000,000 l. borrowed on the three ſhillings per barrel duty on beer, be purchaſed in ſix years, and the tax ſtill permitted to remain; the ſinking fund, inſtead of being leſſened 11,750 l. will be augmented 488,250 l. per annum. Thus, by proceeding in this manner, that is, by purchaſing chaſing the ſtock, and continuing the tax, the means of diſcharging the debt will be vaſtly facilitated, and the liquidation of the whole be not very remote. But as during the time of paying off the debt in this manner, the taxes which conſtitute the ſinking fund muſt be perpetuated, can the preſent oppreſſion of the manufactories, ariſing from thoſe taxes, be ſuſtained during ſo long a time? Will our trade not decline beyond the power of being renovated, before that payment be accompliſhed? And under ſuch circumſtances, will the ſinking fund itſelf produce the two millions, as it is ſuppoſed in The State of the Nation? Beſides theſe objections, will it be prudent to permit ſo immenſe a revenue as that of 4,993,144l. which is now paid as intereſt on the loans, together with 2,000,000l. ſurplus of the ſinking fund, and 348,000l. taken from that fund, and applied in the pamphlet to the current expences of the year, making in the whole not leſs than an annual income of 7,341,144l. to run into the hands of an adminiſtration, which, in future times, if our repreſentatives ſhould ever become ſo perfectly corrupt as to prefer their own intereſt to that of the nation, may be more than ſufficient to ſupplant, not only the authority of the King, but the rights, liberties, and privileges of the people? On this account, though this ſuggeſtion be, at preſent, within the reach of imagination only, the repreſentatives of the people will, moſt certainly, be extremely vigilant and averſe from entruſting any miniſtry with the reception and diſpoſition of ſo vaſt a ſum, which, it is not impoſſible, may be applied to purpoſes totally repugnant to its original deſtination.

Beſides the three preceding, there occurs not to my mind another method in which the two millions can be applied to the paying off the national debt; and neither of theſe ſeems adequate to the removing of the evils under which we ſuffer, nor the averting of the menaces with which we may be threatened. And yet,

yet, ſuch is the ſituation of things, the completion of either of theſe methods, could it be carried into execution, muſt be attended with an uninterrupted peace. Let me now examine if ſuch a ſtate of tranquillity is reaſonably to be expected, from what the author has laid down in his pamphlet, in theſe words, "and what nation in Europe would think of commencing war with her, when they ſaw her maintaining ſo formidable a peace-eſtabliſhment, and with a clear ſurplus revenue of two millions, with which to augment her forces on the firſt hoſtile appearance, without impoſing any new tax, or making any new loan."

From the Revolution in 1689, to the year 1762, incluſive, we have had four wars with France; is it therefore to be imagined that we ſhall remain in peace with that kingdom till the time that the national debt ſhall be diſcharged? I think no ſenſible man will conclude we ſhall. During theſe wars we have incurred a debt of 140,745,964l. and in the laſt war, which continued not full eight years, we ran in debt, of the preceding ſum, 75,087,945l. this ſum, on a medium, is annually 9,385,992l. beſides thoſe taxes which were raiſed within the year.

Now, as I cannot diſcern any juſt reaſon to believe, that the next war will be conducted with more œconomy than the laſt, I do not ſee in what manner a clear revenue of two millions per annum can conſtitute ſo formidable a peace-eſtabliſhment; or that no nation in Europe would think of commencing hoſtilities with Great Britain; I am apprehenſive it will have a contrary effect.

That theſe two millions will not be ſufficient to ſupply the exigencies of the war, is evinced from the hiſtory of all thoſe taxes which have intervened ſince the Revolution. The ſupplies therefore which are to ſupport another war, muſt be raiſed by new loans, and the intereſt of the money borrowed muſt be paid either by the impoſition of new duties, the augmenting the old, or from the ſurplus of the ſinking fund. But the author of The Preſent State of the Nation agrees, that little is to be expected from new impoſts, and the reaſon of it is evident; ninety-nine, in every hundred perſons, already ſpend the whole incomes which ariſe from their labour or property; if a new tax be laid on, or an old one encreaſed on any neceſſary of life, and no others can produce a ſufficient ſum, that neceſſary will require more money to be purchaſed than before. The conſumers muſt therefore purchaſe leſs of this, or of ſome other commodities already taxed, than before the laying on of this tax, becauſe they cannot ſpend more than their whole incomes, and that article ſo taxed will be dearer. If they buy the ſame quantity of the latter as before the new taxation, the ſum which is gained on that tax will be loſt in the others, of which they muſt buy leſs: or if they buy leſs of that which is taxed, the duty which is laid on it will not be productive of a greater ſum than before that tax was impoſed; becauſe what may be gained by the increaſe of the taxation, will be loſt in the diminution of the quantity which is ſold. Hence it is evident, that the preſent revenue is inſuſceptible of any conſiderable encreaſe.

The two millions ſurplus, in the ſinking fund, is therefore that reſource to which alone we muſt apply for the intereſt of new loans, whenever a war ſhall break out between this realm and any other potentate, and better ſucceſs we can hardly expect than we then had. Will then the ſupplies be raiſed at a ſmaller expence in a new war than they were in the laſt? Will the ſinking of the ſtocks on ſuch a rupture be leſs than during our late ſucceſſes? Will not the premiums for new loans therefore be equal to thoſe given in the laſt war, which were 33 per cent.? And, in conſequence of this proceeding, will not the ſurplus of two millions be totally exhauſted in finding intereſt for the loans, in a war of much leſs duration than than that of eight years? It does not therefore appear to my apprehenſion, that the ſtate of affairs, ſo ſettled, as the author of The State of the Nation lays it down, can be a formidable object to any one potentate in Europe; and to the preceding reaſons I ſhall ſubjoin the ſucceeding, which ſtrengthen theſe arguments which I have already offered.

During the continuance of the late hoſtilities, the French, according to the poſition of the preceding author, raiſed their ſupplies within the reſpective years, they are therefore at preſent in as good a ſituation to recommence hoſtilities, as they were to undertake them before the laſt rupture. Whereas we are loaded with a debt of 75,087,943l. and with the payment of an intereſt of 2,614,892l. more than before that time. Such being the reſpective ſituation of the two kingdoms, in what view will the eſtabliſhment propoſed in the pamphlet be ſo formidable, that no nation in Europe will think of commencing war with us? Should we make treaties to that purpoſe! Lord have mercy upon us, and incline their hearts to keep that law. It ſeems therefore no inconſiderate concluſion to infer, that the evils, which are ſo juſtly deſcribed in The State of the Nation, are irremediable by the means which the author of it hath propoſed.

Notwithſtanding that this examination of the preceding part of The State of the Nation does certainly encreaſe the gloomineſs of the proſpect, there is yet no vaſt reaſon to tremble for the fate of Britain, or for her ſubjects to deſpond; though the antecedent method be inſufficient to the purpoſes required, there are others which are adequate to the requiſition. Theſe I ſhall lay before my countrymen, and their ſucceſs will prove inevitable, if the duty of their Repreſentatives be exerted with that vigour and integrity, which alone is equal to the importance of that charge to which they are delegated, and according to thoſe remedies which juſtice calls for, and the preſent opportunities hold forth. The moment is at hand, when we muſt either emerge from our diſtreſs and impotence, or be for ever drowned in the vaſt abyſs of taxation, debt, and ſubjection. It is therefore the indiſpenſible duty, not only of every Repreſentative of the people to exert himſelf to the accompliſhing of our preſervation, but of the conſtituents to addreſs their members, and to require their aſſiſtance to the perfecting of that happy purpoſe; and whoever is remiſs in this moſt eſſential of all human obligations, is an enemy to his country and himſelf: for this reaſon I have preſumed to hold up the mirror to your eyes, that you may truly behold, not only the perilous ſituation in which you ſtand, but the remedies by which your ſufferings may be alleviated, and your ancient power and felicity reſtored.

NUMBER II.

Nov. 19, 1768.

THE method and the means propoſed by the author of The Preſent State of the Nation, having been ſhewn, in the preceding number, to be both inapplicable and inadequate to the diſcharging of the public debt, and the reſtoring of the kingdom to her ancient power and reſpect among the nations, it is evident that ſome more effectual meaſures muſt be found to accompliſh thoſe purpoſes, or that a national bankruptcy, whatever be the ſucceſſes of our fleets and armies, muſt prove to be the inevitable event of a New War. Happily for the nation, there are ſtill reſources in the ſtate, by which many millions may be ſpeedily raiſed for the payment of the public debts, the realm be reſtored to her native importance, her commerce encouraged and enlarged, her ſubjects reinſtated reinſtated in their juſt rights, liberties, and advantages; and the moſt deſerving of the community, all who toil and labour in want and penury, in order to ſupply eaſe, riches, and felicity to the reſt, be reſcued from the fangs of thoſe oppreſſors, under whom they have ſo long groaned, and from whom they have received ſo ſmall an alleviation of their miſeries.

Our poſſeſſions and our trade in Aſia are the firſt objects which ſhall be conſidered as capable of ſupplying immenſe reſources for the payment of the public debt; the revenues of the conquered lands, the extenſion of the Aſiatic commerce, are ſources from whence the nation may receive ſuch pecuniary advantages, as will infallibly revive her trade, reſtore her power, and alleviate the diſtreſſes of the people. From the product of this ſource, the legiſlature hath already applied four hundred thouſand pounds a year, for a ſhort duration, to the exigencies of ſtate. This ſum they either had the right of obliging the Eaſt India Company to contribute, or they had not that right; if the act of the legiſlature, which ſubjected them to that payment, be rather an arbitrary ſtretch of power than an exertion of juſt and conſtitutional authority, it may be deemed a hardſhip and violence on the proprietors of Eaſt India ſtock; but if it be conſentaneous with that power which conſtitutionally reſides in the legiſlature, and is indiviſible from an upright diſcharge of that obligation to which every repreſentative of the people is indiſpenſibly bound, it will be equally juſt to derive all thoſe advantages to the public, which are under the ſame predicament, and ſtill retained in the hands of the Eaſt India Company. For certain it is, that neither the rectitude nor injuſtice of obliging the Company to contribute the preceding ſum, can conſiſt in the quantity of money required for national ſervice, but in the means and meaſures, the obſervance or the violation of the rights and authority by which the powers who obliged them, and the Company themſelves, are conſtitutionally inveſted.

There is no intention in the writer of theſe papers either to ſerve the purpoſes of Miniſters, or to aid the vigour of oppoſition, to cenſure the conduct of the paſt or preſent Directors, to recommend the Houſe Liſt, or that of the other Proprietors, or to invade the rights of private property, under the name of public good; it is to examine how far the powers, which the Eaſt India Company have aſſumed and exerciſed, are conſtitutionally impacted either by royal grants or acts of parliament, and how far that Company have obſerved or tranſgreſſed the rules which thoſe laws and charters have preſcribed them for their conduct.

And in this reſearch, if it ſhall be evinced, that the royal prerogative hath been arbitrarily extended to the injury of the ſtate; that the Commons may poſſibly have exceeded that authority with which they are entruſted by the people; that the territorial revenues of our conqueſts in Aſia are the indiſputable property of the nation, and not of individuals; that the Aſiatic commerce is ſuſceptible of vaſt improvements; that the excluſion of the ſubjects in general, by a pernicious monopoly, is both unwarrantable and oppreſſive; that the powers of raiſing armies, and of exerciſing military law, of declaring war and concluding peace, are ſuch grants as are not only ſubverſive of the rights and liberties of Engliſhmen, but repugnant alſo to the law of nations; that this Company, with all theſe indefenſible conceſſions of ſovereignty, have nevertheleſs exceeded the limits of the acts and charters which have been made in their favour, and will receive no injuſtice by the abrogation of them; that the meaſures to be purſued are both juſt and practicable; that millions muſt thence ariſe, by which the public debt may be ſuddenly diminiſhed, and totally diſcharged, at no great diſtance of time:

I am

I am perſuaded that object will be carried vigorouſly into execution, both by the legiſlature and the miniſtry. For it will hardly be conteſted that the legiſlative powers have an indiſputable authority to ſoften the diſtreſſes, to promote the felicity, and to reſtore the honour and the powers of the nation by all juſtifiable meaſures; ſuch conduct is a duty inſeparable from the idea of repreſentation by the Commons of the realm, and their conſtituents have an indubitable claim to that ſervice, from thoſe whom they have delegated to be the guardians of their rights.

The author of The Preſent State of the Nation, in his eſtimate of thoſe revenues which are to ſupply the annual exigencies of ſtate, and the ſurplus of the ſinking fund, hath propoſed but four hundred thouſand pounds to be yearly derived from our territories in Aſia; and this, notwithſtanding he allows the ſubjects in Aſia can raiſe a ſurplus revenue of a milllion and a half. As he hath not been pleaſed to aſſign his reaſons either for limiting their annual payment to four hundred thouſand pounds, or the income of the revenues to a million and half, I am not enabled to judge of the propriety of thoſe motives which determined him to fix on theſe reſpective ſums. And as I am credibly informed that Lord Clive, in his letters to the Directors, hath eſtimated the Dewane at two millions and a half, I ſhall adopt neither of the preceding ſums, but conſider the Aſiatic revenues as productive of two millions, as they are laid down in the Eaſt India Examiner; and to this concluſion I am induced by the calculations which that writer hath publiſhed, and which have hitherto remained uncontroverted by thoſe whoſe intereſt and whoſe inclinations would certainly have urged them to the attempt, had not the ſtate of that eſtimate been impracticable to be refuted. Beſides which, the ſum aſſigned in the Examiner being the medium between thoſe in The Preſent State of the Nation, and in Lord Clive's letters, letters, is a farther reaſon for its being adopted in theſe papers.

If this ſum be appropriated to the exigencies of national affairs, many are the millions which may be ſpeedily borrowed on thoſe revenues; the public debt will be vaſtly leſſened, and thoſe taxes removed which at preſent oppreſs the trade and commerce of the realm, and have reduced the nation to a preſent decrepitude and impotence. And if thoſe duties are firſt diſcharged, which either do not produce the intereſt of thoſe ſums which are borrowed on them, or ſuch only as are equivalent to that intereſt, the ſurplus of the ſinking fund will be enlarged by the payment of the former, and not diminiſhed by that of the latter; and the people will be alleviated of their oppreſſions by the diſcharge of both: at the ſame time that ſurplus will, by ſuch an application of the money borrowed on the Aſiatic revenues, be ſtill proportionally continued, as the debts are paid off, and lend its aid in the diſcharging of the taxes under which we labour.

Such a meaſure, once carried into execution, would inevitably effect all the purpoſes propoſed in The Preſent State of the Nation, and maintain ſo formidable a peace-eſtabliſhment, that every year of peace will bring with it a ſecurity for the public tranquillity, and other ſtates will find it leſs ſafe to provoke Great Britain to a rupture with them.

Of this truth the French are ſo perfectly convinced, that the apprehenſion of the parliament's reſuming the rights of the whole community from the hands of a few individuals, and of their applying them to the preſervation of our trade, to the reſtoration of our power, and the happineſs of the people, is the great object of their fears at preſent. They know that the ſkill and courage of our land and naval forces, the number and equipment of our fleets and armies, the victories and acquiſitions which may be won, are abſolutely dependent on the

the pecuniary ſupplies which the nation can furniſh; they are acquainted with our exhauſted ſtate, and are convinced, that if the adequate reſources which may be juſtly derived from our lands and commerce in Aſia, are not appropriated to the annihilating the evils which oppreſs us, that the icy and benumbing hand of national poverty muſt freeze the native powers of the Britiſh race, and reduce them to impotence and the ſubjection of a Gallic maſter. To the accompliſhing this purpoſe, our enemies will aſſiduouſly exert themſelves, and ſpread the inſidious influence of money, wherever it can promiſe to prove productive of their deſires and of our ruin; and a more diſcriminating criterion of friend and foe to their native land cannot be exhibited by the ſubjects of this realm, than the manner in which they may conduct themſelves on this important occaſion; for what man can believe, that he who oppoſes the ſalvation of his country by theſe means, is uncorrupt with Gallican or other gold.

Nor is this the only danger to which we muſt be expoſed, ſhould the reſources of Aſia be unapplied to national ſervice, and be ſtill permitted to remain in the hands of a monopolizing Company; though we ſhould not become the prey of France, we muſt inevitably be reduced to be the ſlaves of a ſmall number of our fellow-ſubjects. The power of money is as compulſive as that of arms; and when judiciouſly applied, as certainly effects the purpoſes of conqueſt and enſlavement. If two millions ſterling be permitted annually to run into the hands of twenty-four men, who are called Directors, will it not prove a power ſuperior to every reſiſtance from patriotiſm and virtue in a majority of thoſe who may hereafter ſuperintend the affairs of legiſlation and the ſtate? Will not then theſe twenty-four ſubjects become a deſpotic oligarchy, too powerful to be reſiſted, and abſolute maſters of the King, the Kingdom, and the People? The prevention of ſuch events is impracticable, ticable, but by reſuming the rights of the nation, and appropriating them to the ſervice of the public.

It is the preſent mode diligently to ſpread among the people, that the Directors have compromiſed the Company's affairs with the Miniſtry; and this aſſertion is promulged, with a view to damp the ardor and the application of the people to their Repreſentatives in Parliament. But the artifice of this deſign is eaſily diſcerned; and I will venture to aſſert, that it is an illiberal and a fallacious report. The preſent adminiſtration will not forego the glorious opportunity of becoming the ſaviours of their country, nor render themſelves the juſt and univerſal execration of the preſent, and of all ſucceeding ages, for the ſake of private views, and intereſted conſiderations: they deem the ſettlement of this affair to be a negotiation which appertains to the legiſlature; and are convinced that the power of the realm, the happineſs of the people, and even the exiſtence of liberty and the conſtitution, depend on the execution of it, with juſtice to the Company, and utility to the nation. For ſhould this auſpicious opportunity be neglected, a national bankruptcy muſt inevitably enſue another declaration of war, and that general concuſſion will, like an earthquake, ſhake the foundations both of public and of private property and credit; it will bring the reſpective fabrics headlong to the ground, and ſpread an univerſal devaſtation through the realm. Such calamities have conſtantly let looſe the multitude to participate in the ſpoils of their oppreſſors. Their neceſſities will then compel them to ſeek their own relief, and to ſuperſede all deference to that clamour which may be raiſed againſt the invaſion of private property. The calls of nature will deſpiſe the inſtitutes of men, and when there are no viſible means of extricating themſelves from their preſent calamities, but by ſuch violence, the threats, the ſentences, and even the execution of the laws, muſt loſe their terror.

To

To beings in ſuch a ſituation, the extinction of their ſenſations by death is an object of conſolation, and even a ſecondary encouragement for their relieving their inſtant and preſſing neceſſities, by ſeizing the poſſeſſions and properties of the opulent; and thus, at leaſt, arrive at the end of their miſeries, by offending the laws, to which they cannot attain by the obſervation of them.

That the legiſlative powers may prevent ſuch anarchy, rapine, and ſubverſion of all order and good government, is certainly the ardent wiſh of every honeſt citizen. In order, therefore, to preclude ſuch deſtructive events, I ſhall in the ſubſequent papers proceed to examine the ſubjects, which are propoſed in this which lies before you.

NUMBER III.

Nov. 22, 1768.

THOUGH the commerce and territorial revenues which the kingdom has acquired in Aſia, are not the ſole reſources from which many millions may be ſuddenly raiſed and expeditiouſly applied to the diminution of the public debt, yet, as it is the principal ſpring from whence theſe ſums muſt be derived which are to accompliſh that deſirable and neceſſary end, on this account it deſerves and claims the firſt and moſt particular attention of the nation and the legiſlature. In order therefore to juſtify the meaſures which will be propoſed in the ſubſequent papers, I ſhall now conſider the charters which have been granted to the Eaſt India Company by the Crown, and examine how far they are conſiſtent ſiſtent with, or repugnant to the due authority of the Prerogative Royal, and the rights, privileges, and liberties of the people of England.

As a private and circumſtantial detail of the Eaſt India Company, from its origin to the preſent time, muſt prove both prolix and unneceſſary, I ſhall take no notice of thoſe charters granted to them antecedent to the reign of Charles the Second; except that the firſt obtained from Elizabeth was given with the proviſo of being revoked, on two years notice given under the Privy Seal.

During the Civil Wars, in the reign of Charles the Firſt, all tranſactions, relative to this affair, were held in ſuſpenſe; but peace, and the Stuarts being reſtored, a new charter was granted to this Aſiatic Company by Charles the Second, in the 13th year of his reign; and another in the ſucceeding reign of James the Second, confirming the former, and adding to it ſome New Rights and Privileges. Theſe I ſhall conſider together, to avoid prolixity.

By theſe charters the Company was made a body corporate and politic, in deed and perpetual ſucceſſion, under the ſtyle of The Company of Merchants of London trading to the Eaſt Indies, and the chief direction of their affairs was committed to a Governor and twenty-four members, to be annually elected by the proprietors in that commerce.

By theſe charters they were granted the excluſive right of trading by ſea to all ports and parts of Africa, Aſia, and America, from the Cape of Good Hope eaſtward, to the Streights of Magellan; and to exerciſe and carry on that trade, in that manner which the Company ſhould think fit, in all provinces, lands, and dominions, excepting ſuch as were actually and lawfully in the poſſeſſion of Chriſtian princes in amity with England, and who would not permit ſuch trade.

Notwith-

Notwithſtanding this right of trading was ſo extenſively granted reſpecting the parts of the globe, the number of veſſels was circumſcribed to ſix good ſhips and ſix pinnaces; and no ſubject of England was permitted to trade within the preceding limits, without a licence firſt obtained from this Eaſt India Company; and whoever ſhould tranſgreſs that interdict, both the goods, merchandize, and whatever elſe ſhould be brought into the dominions of England, or which the Company might find and ſeize, in any other dominions to which they had the grants of trading, together with the ſhips on board which they were found, were forfeited, one half to the Crown, and the other to the Company; the offenders were to be impriſoned at the King's will, and not releaſed till they had given bonds of 1000l. each, at leaſt, to the Company, not to trade to thoſe parts interdicted in the charters.

To this privilege of trading by licence from the Company, merchant ſtrangers were equally permitted with the ſubjects of the Crown; and the Kings bound themſelves not to grant permiſſion of trading to thoſe parts to any other perſons during the exiſtence of thoſe charters.

Such were the particular privileges, among many others, which were granted to the Eaſt India Company, reſpecting their rights of trading, and by which all other ſubjects of the realm were precluded from that commerce. But as charters, however coercive they may be expreſſed, cannot execute themſelves, nor prove ſufficiently reſtrictive againſt the luſt of acquiring pecuniary advantages, where there are not other more active and compulſive powers, theſe were enforced by all thoſe precautions which could operate to that effect, both on the minds and actions of all thoſe who might deſire to interfere in the Aſiatic commerce.

To this intent there was granted not only the right of adminiſtering oaths of fidelity to the Company by it, but that alſo of forming ſuch oaths to be taken both in England and Aſia, by all who were engaged in their ſervice, as the Governor and Company ſhall deviſe, direct, or appoint; and to examine on oath, all factors, maſters, and others employed in their ſervice, in order to diſcover abuſes and injuries done to the Company.

But as oaths, like charters, were deemed to be but feeble guarantees againſt the deſire of acquiring riches, there were added to theſe oaths ſuch powers as might more prevalently compel mankind to obey the preceding injunctions, and more effectually ſecure the preceding rights and privileges to the Company; and to the effecting that purport, they were granted alſo the power of making laws, conſtitutions, orders, &c. as the Company ſhould think neceſſary and convenient for the government of the factors, ſervants, and all others employed in their voyages and trade, and to revoke and alter them at will. And in order to enforce the obſervation of ſuch laws, they were granted alſo the privilege of impoſing and ordaining ſuch pains, penalties, and puniſhments, by impriſonment of body, by fines and amerciaments, or by all theſe, upon all ſuch offenders againſt ſuch laws; and theſe fines were to be applied for the uſe of the Company, without impediment from the Crown.

Such being the legiſlative powers granted by charter, the executive alſo were depoſited in the ſame hands: they held the privilege alſo of appointing and eſtabliſhing governors, councils, and other officers, in Aſia, with power to judge all perſons belonging to the Company, or who might live under them, in all cauſes civil and commercial; to erect Courts and nominate Judges, to hear all cauſes of forfeitures, and ſeizures of ſhips and goods, and all matters of that nature. But as the execution of the laws, which even they they themſelves ſhould inſtitute, muſt neceſſarily be attended with ſome ſmall delay in the operation, they were benignantly indulged with, and humanely accepted a more ſummary method of proceeding; the right of ſeizing all ſuch Engliſhmen, and other ſubjects in the Eaſt Indies, who ſhould ſail in any Engliſh or Indian ſhips, inhabit theſe parts without permiſſion or licence from the Company, or even contemn or diſobey their orders; and every perſon or ſubject, employed by the Company in India, was liable to ſuffer puniſhment for any offence, as the Preſidents and Councils in Aſia ſhould think fit, and the offence require; and if they appealed from their judgments, they were to be taken into cuſtody, and brought priſoners to England, to the Governor and Company, and there to receive puniſhment as the caſe required, and the law allowed.

Such being the excluſive right of trading, the adminiſtering and making oaths, the laws, and ordinances, the penalties and puniſhments of offenders granted to theſe Aſiatic maſters, they were ſtill unſatisfied with ſuch enormous conceſſions. There was therefore ſuperadded to the commercial and civil powers, thoſe alſo which can be carried into execution by military force. On this account, the forts, fortifications, places, plantations, &c. already poſſeſſed, were immediately ſurrendered to the Company, and from that time to remain under the power and command of the Governor and Company; and they had the privilege of building caſtles and other places of ſtrength, whenever they ſhould extend their trade. But as fortifications are unavailable without forces, they had the grants of raiſing troops among their own countrymen in England, and of tranſporting them to their places in Aſia, together with ammunition and other ſtores requiſite for the ſuſtaining a military eſtabliſhment, and of appointing the officers who were to command them.

This

This power of raiſing a land army being thought ſtill inadequate to the accompliſhing of their intentions, they were further granted the privilege of equipping ſhips of war, and of appointing Admirals and other ſea-officers, who were to ſerve under their direction. And that theſe troops and navies might not be confined to actions defenſive only, theſe gracious Kings granted their ſubjects of this Company the right of declaring war and concluding peace, under the Company's Seal, with all ſuch Princes as were not Chriſtian; and to right or recompence themſelves on the goods, eſtates, or people, from whom the Company might receive interruption or wrong to their trade. And laſtly, their ſoldiers and ſailors were ſubjected to the deſpotic mandates of military law for any miſdemeanors they might commit, and to ſuch fines for breach of orders, as the Company ſhould think fit to impoſe.

Beſides the preceding circumſtances, they were obliged to import as much bullion as they exported, and had the liberty of coining money in the Mint of London, not exceeding 50,000 l. for one voyage; and in Aſia as much as they pleaſed, for the conveniency of trade and other exigencies of the Company's affairs.

Such were the more than regal rights of the Crown of England, which the two Kings antecedently named have granted to an oligarchy of their ſubjects; with this proviſo indeed, that their charters were revokable on three years notice, under the Privy Seal or Sign Manual of the King. But is there a perſon entitled to the poſſeſſion of common ſenſe, who, on reviewing the above grants, will heſitate to acknowledge, that had the Company at that time poſſeſſed a revenue in Aſia of two millions a year, as they do at preſent, that in thoſe days of corruption (and I wiſh the preſent and the ſucceeding may be more replete with ſelf-denial and true patriotic virtue) they would have bid bid defiance to the King, his Council, and the legiſlature; and by the all-conquering powers of ſuch an immenſe ſum, would as certainly have aſcended to ſovereignty in this realm, as ever this kingdom hath been formerly ſubdued by Romans, Saxons, Danes, and Normans; for whoever commands the powerful forces of two millions of money, is as ſure of conquering all reſiſtance, as if he was the leader of two millions of men; and will ſecurely walk to empire without danger of defeat or riſque of bloodſhed. This conſideration ought to alarm not only the people but the Sovereign himſelf, if Liberty be dear to the former, and Royalty to the latter. For ſuch is the ſtate in which they ſtand at preſent, reſpecting the uſurping oligarchy of the Eaſt India Company, and the revenues which they have the hardineſs to retain from the public ſervice.

But as nothing is to be inſerted in theſe papers which is to remain unproved, according to the beſt abilities of the writer of them, he will, in that which is to follow the preſent, fairly ſtate the acknowledged and incidental rights of the Royal prerogative, and compare the grants in the preceding charters, with the juſt authority which that regal power conſtitutionally enjoys. It will be then diſcerned whether ſuch charters be or be not conſiſtent with that regal power, and the liberties of a free people; and whether the nation have a juſt claim on the lands and commerce of the Eaſt Indies, in order to ſave their country from impending perdition, and themſelves from approaching tyranny.

NUMBER IV.

Nov. 26, 1768.

IN the preceding paper, having laid before my readers, ſome of thoſe ſingular and unprecedented grants which were made by the royal brothers of the Stuart race to the Eaſt India Company, I ſhall now enquire into thoſe powers which are conſtitutionally appertaining to the prerogative royal, what rights the people poſſeſs, both conſidered as part of the legiſlative authority, and as individual perſons, and what are the privileges which bodies corporate, like that of the Eaſt India Company, can legally receive and exerciſe.

The King, by prerogative, has the executive power of government; of ſending and receiving ambaſſadors; of making treaties; of proclaiming war and peace; of iſſuing repriſals, and of granting ſafe conduct. He is general of the kingdom, and may raiſe fleets and armies; build forts, and confine his ſubjects within the realm, or recall them from foreign parts. He is the fountain of juſtice, and general conſervator of the peace. He may erect courts, proſecute offenders, pardon crimes, and iſſue proclamations. He is the ſource of honour, of office, and of privilege. He is the arbiter of domeſtic, but not of foreign commerce; all lands which are conquered, or ceded to his ſubjects, are taken and held in his name, and are his dominions; he can grant patents, charters, and incorporate ſocieties with powers of making bye-laws, and is entitled to oaths of allegiance from his ſubjects; and laſtly, as a Sovereign, he can do no wrong.

The rights of the people, conſidered as part of the legiſlative power, are to concur, by the intervention and aſſiſtance of their repreſentatives, in making all laws laws by which they are to be ruled; the expreſs letter of which laws, neither the King, nor his magiſtrates can either ſuſpend, diſpenſe with, alter, or abrogate one ſyllable. It is their peculiar right to raiſe the pecuniary ſupplies of the year, which are to pay the fleets and armies of the nation, and to furniſh the other exigencies of ſtate. And laſtly, the Houſe of Commons have an inquiſitorial authority of examining into the exerciſes of the prerogative royal, and of calling all ſuch miniſters and counſellors to account, to impeach and try them before the Houſe of Lords, by whom they may be puniſhed with fine, impriſonment, baniſhment, or death, according to the nature and degree of their tranſgreſſions: beſides the antecedent rights which the people poſſeſs in their aggregate and legiſlative ſtate, they enjoy others alſo as individual perſons. The firſt of which is the natural liberty of mankind, circumſcribed by human inſtitutes, for the good of ſociety. In conſequence of this, they have the abſolute rights of perſonal ſecurity, perſonal liberty, and of private property; they are therefore entitled to the enjoyment of life, limb, body, health, and reputation; they have the right of locomotion, or of paſſing from place to place, or from one part of the globe to the other, without illegal reſtraint or baniſhment; they can uſe and diſpoſe of their own lawful acquiſitions, without injury or illegal diminution; they have a right to the conſtitution and power of parliament, to the limitation of the King's prerogative, and to vindicate them when actually violated; to the regular adminiſtration of public juſtice, and trials by their peers; the right of petitioning for grievances, together with that of having and uſing arms for ſelf-defence.

Together with the preceding rights which are particularly ſpecified, every individual of the community has an equal claim to all privileges, liberties, and immunities, with every other of the ſame rank; circum-ſtances which are eſſential to the exiſtence of a free ſtate, and inſeparable from the exerciſe and operation of a free people. In fact, all the ſubjects of this realm do conſtitutionally ſtand on the ſame common level of natural Liberty; and no power in this realm can legally diminiſh this equal right, either by reducing the number of thoſe privileges to which the whole community is juſtly entitled, or by imparting to men, or particular ſocieties of men, ſuch degrees of power and privilege, as ſhall, in fact, render the other ſubjects leſs free, or more ſubſervient to the purpoſes of others than the equal right of freedom can allow.

If theſe be not the innate rights and privileges of Engliſhmen, they are not a free people; and if they be a free people, no power in the ſtate, without arbitrary proceedings, can deprive them of their equal rights, or grant privileges and powers to one part of the ſubjects which reſcind the liberties of the other; for ſuch meaſures are incompatible with the rights to which all men are entitled by the laws of nature, and of which Engliſhmen are in poſſeſſion by the conſtitution of the government, by national compact and the laws of civil ſociety.

Such being the prerogatives of the crown and the rights of the people, I ſhall now conſider how far thoſe regal powers may be communicated to bodies corporate, and how far ſuch ſocieties are capable of receiving privileges, and of what nature they are, from the conceſſions of the Kings of England. The powers incident to all Corporations, are to maintain perpetual ſucceſſion, to act in their corporate capacity like an individual, to hold and purchaſe lands ſubject to the Statutes of Mortmain; to have a Common Seal; to make bye-laws which are binding on themſelves, unleſs contrary to law, and then they are void. This is included alſo by law, in the very act of incorporation; but no trading Company is allowed to make bye-laws, which may affect the King's prerogative, or the common profit of the people, under penalty of 40 l. unleſs they be approved by the Chancellor, Treaſurer, and Chief Juſtices, or the Juſtices of Aſſize in their circuits; and even when ſo approved, they are nevertheleſs void, if contrary to law: theſe are the five powers which are inſeparably incident to every Corporation aggregate; but of late the power of purchaſing lands from any living granter, is greatly abridged by ſtatutes; ſo that at preſent corporations muſt have licence from the King to purchaſe, before they can exert that capacity which is veſted in them by common law; nor is even this licence, in all caſes, ſufficient. Of theſe corporate bodies, the King is conſtituted, by law, the Viſitor; and the law has appointed the place alſo wherein he ſhall exerciſe this juriſdiction, which is the King's Bench; in this Court only all miſbehaviours of this kind of corporations are enquired into and redreſſed, and all their controverſies decided.

Such then are the more diſtinguiſhed and eſſential prerogatives of the Crown, the exertion of which is open to the examination of the inquiſitors of the ſtate, the repreſentatives of the people in the Houſe of Commons.

Such are the conſtitutional rights of the people, inſeparable by any powers in the legiſlature, whilſt they remain a free people, and which neither the King nor their repreſentatives can juſtly diminiſh or abridge; and which the latter are obliged to defend and preſerve.

And ſuch are the privileges which Kings can grant to corporate ſocieties, and which ſuch incorporated bodies can receive under the limitations of not being contradictory to the laws of the realm.

I ſhall now examine the exertion of the prerogative royal, as it ſtands in the Eaſt India Charters, and then comparing the grants which they contain, with that regal power in the King, with the rights of the people, and with the privileges which Corporations can receive, it will be evident whether the Sovereigns of England have obſerved the juſt limits of prerogative power, whether the people have been robbed of their indiſputable rights, and their repreſentatives have faithfully diſcharged the duty of that ſupreme delegation which conſtitutes and appoints them guardians of the public good, and of private right and liberty, by ſuffering ſuch charters to be firſt granted, and then to remain ſo long unaboliſhed; and laſtly, whether the Eaſt India Company can, conſtitutionally, receive and exerciſe ſuch powers as the Kings of England have preſumed to grant them. From a due conſideration of all theſe particulars, we may reaſonably hope to arrive to a true deciſion of this ſubject.

And indeed the whole merit of the cauſe might be ſafely reſted on this ſingle point, that as the privileges which are ſuſceptible of being granted to corporate bodies, by all the acts and operations of the prerogative royal, are thoſe which are abovementioned, that therefore the enormous privileges and powers which have been granted to the Eaſt India Company, are unconſtitutional and illegal; and that whatever has been thus obtained cannot be lawfully received nor exerciſed, but are, ipſo facto, void and unwarrantable. For certainly the King is incapable of conveying the power of exerting acts of ſovereignty to any man or body of men, in their name and under their ſeal and commiſſion; for this would be to impart the regal rights, which are incommunicable to ſubjects; nor can he grant the rights which are in common to all his people, to a few, whom he may peremptorily ſelect for that purpoſe; for this would be to make both ſovereigns and ſlaves of men, who are equally entitled to every national right, by birth and inheritance, with thoſe whom an arbitrary Prince may inſolently preſume to exalt or to enſlave to the obſervation of thoſe rights he himſelf, both by his Coronation

Coronation oath, and in return for that allegiance which is due to him, is as equally and as firmly bound, as his ſubjects are to defend him in all his prerogatives and ſovereignty.

Such being the true ſtate of the preceding ſubjects, I make no doubt but my readers will readily anticipate the concluſion which ought to be drawn from the more intimate examination of the preceding ſubjects; I ſhall therefore, at preſent, leave them to their own enquiries, in this moſt important concern to their eaſe, happineſs, freedom, and to the dignity of the Crown, the power and reſtitution of the ſtate, and the exiſtence of the conſtitution. By theſe means they will be prepared with more deliberate ſentiments, to judge of the rectitude or errors which may be found in the arguments which ſhall be delivered in the ſucceeding papers.

NUMBER V.

Nov. 29, 1768.

AS I have no doubt that my readers have by this time conſidered and compared the grants in the Eaſt India charters, with the conſtitutional prerogatives of the Crown, the rights of the people, and the privileges which bodies corporate are capable of legally receiving and carrying into execution, and from that compariſon are convinced of the deſpotiſm which thoſe Kings exerted, and the injuries which the nation ſuffered. I ſhall not enter into a logical train of deduction to prove, what they have already inferred from the preceding papers, that ſuch grants are ſubverſive of the liberties of Engliſhmen, and creative of a ſet of tyrants, who are even more arbitrary than thoſe who gave them being.

But

But as a full elucidation of this poſition cannot be improper in examining a ſubject ſo great in itſelf, and ſo intereſting to the whole community, I ſhall offer to my readers a kind of expoſition on theſe charters, by which the deſpotiſm exerted by the Crown, the violence committed on the people, and the impoſſibility that the Eaſt India Company can be lawfully inveſted with ſuch powers as the charters grant and they have exerciſed, may be intuitively diſcerned in this day's Mirror. By theſe means, like all other viſible objects, they will want no other argument to prove their exiſtence, than that of being ſeen, and no other animation nor aſſiſtance for their being aboliſhed, than that ancient ſpirit of Britons which hath ſo glorioufly defeated the arbitrary acts of former Kings, and the uſurpations of their tyrannous and oppreſſive fellow ſubjects; and by ſuch immortal and patriotic deeds reſtored thoſe rights, liberties, and privileges, which have been illegally invaded and ſubverted, to themſelves and their poſterity.

In this expoſition, I intend to preſerve, in ſome meaſure, the form of a charter, inſerting only ſuch illuſtrations of the particular grants as naturally ariſe from the ſubject itſelf; and theſe will, at the ſame time, ſerve as explanatory and practical obſervations on the prerogative royal, the people's rights, and the Company's privileges.

Charles and James the Second, both by the grace of God Kings of England, &c. to all to whom theſe preſents ſhall come, greeting: Whereas our truſty and well-beloved ſubjects, the Governor and Company of Merchants trading to the Eaſt Indies, have humbly beſought us to grant and confirm their former charters, with ſome alterations and amendments; we have therefore, out of our ſpecial grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, and at the humble petition of the ſaid Governor and Company, granted, that they ſhall for ever be one body corporate and politic, in deed and and name, really and truly, for ever, &c. And we graciouſly grant to the ſaid Company the right of trading by ſea to all parts of Africa, Aſia, and America, from the Cape of Good Hope, eaſtward, to the Streights of Magellan, excluſive of all our other loving ſubjects, 'who, by the laws of the land, and the 'conſtitution of the realm, are as juſtly intitled to 'the exerciſe of this trade, as we are to the Crown of 'England.' And we grant to the ſaid Company the right of exerciſing this trade in the manner they ſhall think fit, in the provinces, lands, and dominions of all Sovereigns and nations which are included within the preceding limits; 'over whom and whoſe realms 'and inhabitants we have not the leaſt right or au-'thority, either by the law of nature or of nations.' Provided ſuch Potentates and people be not Chriſtian, nor in amity with Chriſtian Princes, who will not permit the exerciſe of ſuch trade. And we grant that no ſubject of England ſhall preſume to trade within the preceding limits, without licence firſt obtained from the Company; and this 'We grant, notwith-'ſtanding that every ſubject has by inheritance and 'the conſtitution, the incontravertible right of ex-'tending his commerce into whatever country he can 'find admittance, even without requiring any licence 'from Us his Sovereigns; and that we cannot give 'and grant to the ſaid Company thoſe privileges 'which we do not poſſeſs, and which if we did poſ-'ſeſs, the Company could not receive as a body cor-'porate.'

Neverthelefs, we graciouſly grant to the ſaid Company the right of ſeizing the goods, merchandize, and ſhips, and whatever elſe ſhall be brought into our dominions, or the dominions of any other prince or people, wherever they may trade within the preceding limits, one half to be forfeited to the Crown, the other to the Company; and to this intent 'We have 'ſuſpended the laws of the land, reſcinded the rights

'of the ſubject, and granted them to thoſe who are 'incapable of lawfully exerciſing ſuch rights, which 'are in direct violation of the great Charter of Li- 'berties, which ought to be held ſacred by us and 'our poſterity, and to the protection of which every 'ſubject is equally entitled, and who, againſt procla- 'mations iſſued by ourſelves, to ſuch excluſive pur- 'poſes would find redreſs by the laws of England, 'which we can neither diſpenſe with, nor ſuſpend, but 'by acts of tyranny and oppreſſion.'

And we farther grant, out of our ſpecial grace, to the ſaid Eaſt India Company the right of ſeizing ſuch their fellow ſubjects ſo offending, and of impriſoning them at the King's will, and that ſuch ſubjects ſo im- priſoned, ſhall not be diſcharged, but on each of them giving a bond of 1000 l. to the ſaid Company, not to trade within the preceding limits; and 'this 'we grant, in full contradiction to Magna Charta, 'which gives the right of perſonal ſecurity, perſonal 'liberty, and private property, to every ſubject of 'the realm; and this right of ſeizing and impriſoning 'our ſubjects, we grant alſo to be exerciſed in the 'dominions of other Princes, who have an equal 'right to grant the ſame privileges to be exerciſed by 'their ſubjects in our realms as we have in theirs; 'and yet, for the doing which, without our conſent, 'as we have granted the ſaid Company to do, without 'that of ſuch Princes, we ſhould moſt certainly pu- 'niſh, as they would be then acting contrary to the 'law of nations, which we are reſolved to have ob- 'ſerved in our kingdoms, although we have granted 'to the ſaid Company the right of infracting them in 'all others, within the preceding limits, and which, 'nevertheleſs, ought to be obſerved, and held invio- 'late by all Sovereigns and all ſubjects.'

And as we have excluded all our loving ſubjects from trading by ſea to the parts above-mentioned, without licence from the Company, we grant alſo to alien merchants, the right of trading with such licence; 'neither of which we are legally authorized 'to grant without dispensing with the laws of the 'land, and suspending the rights of our people.'

And for the farther encouragement of the said Company, we grant them the right of making and administering what oaths they shall devise, direct, or appoint to be taken by their servants, whether civil or military, as oaths of allegiance to the said Company, 'which power of constituting and appointing 'such oaths can reside in the legislative powers only; 'and which allegiance being due to Us alone, is un-'transferable to any subject, and can neither be 'taken nor given by any of them, but in direct sub-'version of our own and the people's rights.' Notwithstanding which, we farther grant to the said Company the right of putting all men in their service to their oaths, in order to the discovering the offences which these men may have committed; 'and 'this we grant, though by the laws of the land, 'which we can neither alter nor abrogate, all our 'subjects are legally entitled to the refusing such oaths 'as tend to accuse themselves.'

And that nothing may be wanting, by which to shew our gracious intentions to all our loving subjects, we hereby grant to twenty-five of them, the Governor and Committees of the East-India Company, the right of making what laws, constitutions, and orders they shall think necessary and convenient for the government of their servants and factors, and all others employed in their voyages and trade, and to revoke and alter them at will; and for the enforcing such laws, we grant the said Company the right of imposing and ordaining pains, penalties, and amerciaments, such as imprisonment and pecuniary fines, on all those who shall offend against the said laws. 'And these 'privileges we grant, although by the constitution 'we have no right to make one law, and therefore

'cannot transfer that power to others, which we our-'ſelves do not poſſeſs; and although the rights of 'perſonal liberty, ſecurity, and property, cannot be 'forfeited or loſt by any of our ſubjects, nor fines 'nor other amerciaments impoſed, but according to 'the due courſe of juſtice, by the verdict of twelve 'good and lawful men, their Peers, of the realm of 'England, and in defiance of the conſtitution and 'the rights of our ſubjects.'

And we ordain, that all ſuch fines ſhall be applied ſolely to the uſe of the Company, without impediment from the Crown, 'in order that ſuch fines may 'be an encouragement to the ſaid Company to ſeize 'and impriſon all our well-beloved ſubjects, who do 'or do not offend ſuch laws; and a premium for 'the condemning the innocent as well as the guilty, 'for the ſake of enriching the ſaid Company; and 'we hereby bind ourſelves not to interfere in theſe 'fines, notwithſtanding that, by our coronation oath, 'we have ſworn to protect the rights and liberties, 'and to do equal juſtice to all our loving ſubjects; 'and that the ſaid ſubjects are juſtly entitled to this 'protection, in return for their ſworn allegiance, and 'by the great charter of the realm, which is equally 'binding on us as on our people.

NUMBER VI.

Dec. 3, 1768.

AND as we have granted to the Eaſt India Company the legiſlative power of making what laws they ſhall think neceſſary for their execrable purpoſes, we hereby grant them the executive alſo, with privilege of appointing and eſtabliſhing Governors and Councils, cils, and other officers, in Aſia, Africa, and America, among people whoſe names we have never heard, and in places which are not yet diſcovered; with powers to judge all perſons belonging to their Company, or who may live in the ſame places with them, in all cauſes Civil and Commercial, to erect Courts and nominate Judges, to hear and determine all cauſes of forfeitures and ſeizures of ſhips and goods, and of all the matters relative to that nature. 'And theſe 'rights we grant, that the unconſtitutional and arbi-'trary laws which the ſaid Company may deviſe, 'may the more certainly be carried into execution, 'and our other beloved ſubjects be the more effec-'tually precluded from the exerciſing thoſe rights, 'which we have no authority to reſcind, nor the 'Company to receive, in prejudice to our other 'people. And for the accompliſhing this intent, we 'have granted the power of executing thoſe laws to 'men whoſe welfare and whoſe ruin are abſolutely 'dependant on the momentary nod and deſpotic in-'tention of the ſaid Eaſt India Company, and who, 'by the hopes of acquiring riches, and the dread of 'being diſmiſſed from their offices and poſts, are 'bound implicitly to obey the peremptory mandates 'of their new inhuman ſovereigns.'

And although we have no right to impart any legal authority to be exerciſed by one ſubject over another, but in our own name, and in our own dominions, 'Yet we nevertheleſs grant to the ſaid Company the 'right of exerciſing that power, not only on our 'own ſubjects, but even on thoſe of other Sovereigns, 'in the name of the ſaid Company; and in realms 'which in no ſenſe can appertain to our kingdoms. 'And we hereby graciouſly exclude all the Sovereigns 'and Powers in Aſia, Africa, and America, within 'the preceding limits, from the right of exerting 'their own ſovereignties, and the people from en-'joying and exerciſing their own privileges, to both

'which they are juſtly entitled, and by all which we 'are interdicted to make theſe grants.

'And we further grant, of our ſpecial grace, and 'on the humble petition of the ſaid Company, the 'right of ſuſpending, by themſelves, and their ſer-
'vants in India, all due courſe of law and juſtice, 'and inſtantly to ſeize all our ſubjects, as well as 'their effects, who ſhall be found in the exertion of
'the hereditary rights of all Engliſhmen, on board
'the ſhips of our other Engliſh ſubjects, or even on 'thoſe of the Indian ſtates. And theſe rights we 'grant to the ſaid Company, in defiance of Magna
'Charta, which expreſly declares, that all the ports
'of England ſhall enjoy their antient liberties and 'rights of trading; and that no freeman ſhall be
'ſeized, impriſoned, or deprived of his property,
'liberties, or rights, but by the laws of the land,
'and the judgment of his Peers; and in defiance
'alſo of the laws of God, of nature, and of nations,
'in direct violation of the legal ſovereignty of other
'Princes, whoſe ſhips we have no authority to ſearch
'or examine but in times of war. And we hereby 'declare, that all ſuch our ſubjects, who ſhall pre-
'ſume to exerciſe their lawful privileges, in diſobe-'dience and contempt of the arbitrary will of the
'Eaſt India Company, ſhall be deemed as rebels
'againſt the ſovereign power of the Governor and
'ſaid Company, and be puniſhed in a ſummary way,
'without due courſe of law. And if any ſubjects,
'ſo offending the illegal laws and unconſtitutional
'ordinances of the ſaid Company, ſhall have the
'impudence to appeal from the tyranny of the Go'vernors, Council, or Courts in Aſia, to the laws
'of England, they ſhall be brought priſoners on 'board the ſhips of the ſaid Aſiatic Oligarchy, and
'in irons, if the Company ſhall ſo think fit, to the 'Governor and Company in England, there to re'ceive ſuch condign puniſhment, as the atrociouſneſs

'of

‘ of exerting their own rights, the impudence of dif-
‘ obeying the Company’s commands, and the ille‘ gality of appealing to the laws of their country ‘ require.’

‘ And we grant, out of our ſpecial Grace, and at ‘ the petition of the ſaid Company, not only a right ‘ excluſive of all our other ſubjects, of trading within ‘ the preceding limits, but that of ſeizing and taking ‘ poſſeſſion, in their own names, of the lands and ‘ dominions of the Princes inhabiting three parts of ‘ the whole world, and to build forts and fortifica‘ tions wherever they may extend their trade, in de‘ fiance of all ſuch ſovereigns and people; and in ‘ order the more effectually to accompliſh theſe de‘ ſigns, we grant the ſaid Company the privilege of ‘ raiſing an army among our own ſubjects in England,
‘ by inveigling, enſnaring, intoxicating, and kidnap‘ ping our beloved ſubjects, to confine them in the ‘ private priſons of the ſaid Company in England,
‘ to force them in the ſecreſy of night on board their ‘ ſhips, tranſport them to Aſia, Africa, and America,
‘ there to fight their battles, and remain their ſlaves, ‘ during life; and to appoint ſuch commanders and ‘ officers over them as they ſhall think fit, having all ‘ firſt taken an oath of allegiance to the ſaid Com‘ pany, which cannot be legally required but by and ‘ to ourſelves alone, nor taken by our ſubjects but in ‘ direct violation of that allegiance which is due to ‘ us their only ſovereigns, according to the conſti-‘ tution.’

And we further grant to the ſaid Aſiatic Oligarchy, the like privilege of equipping naval as well as land forces, of appointing admirals and other officers to be under the ſole and arbitrary direction of the ſaid Oligarchy.

And further, we grant the ſaid Company the right of levying money for the payment of theſe land and naval forces, ‘ notwithſtanding the expreſs terms of

To the preceding privilege, which exceeds the limits of the ſovereign power of England's Kings, we grant alſo the regal incommunicable power, but in our name, of making war and peace, of ſending ambaſſadors, and concluding treaties, in the name and under the common ſeal of the ſovereign Company, 'by which 'we have given that ſeal an equal power with the 'great ſeal of England, and further erected the ſaid 'Oligarchy into arbitrary power.'

Having in this manner, and in imitation of our Holy Father the Pope, granted on the humble petition of our beloved ſubjects, the Eaſt India Company, who are all good Chriſtians, the rights, properties, and dominions of all princes and nations who are Infidels, we further, on their ſaid petition, grant the privileges of righting and recompenſing themſelves againſt all ſuch unchriſtian potentates and people who ſhall preſume to interrupt the Eaſt India Company in the exerciſe of whatever trade they may pleaſe to carry on in the dominions of the ſaid potentates and people; 'and to the accompliſhing this intent, we moſt gra- 'ciouſly grant the ſaid Company the right of ſeizing, 'plundering, burning, and otherwiſe deſtroying the 'goods, effects, cities, lands, and all other the pro- 'perties of the ſaid princes and their ſubjects, to 'ſubdue, ſeize, dethrone, and put to death by force 'of arms, all Kings and people, who, in defence of 'themſelves, their country, rights, privileges, and 'poſſeſſions, ſhall have the impudence to oppoſe the 'ſaid Eaſt India Company in the exerciſe of all the 'inhuman privileges which they have petitioned to 'have given them, and we have graciouſly granted.

'And theſe rights and privileges we grant, not- 'withſtanding of our certain knowledge we are con'vinced,

‘ vinced, that the perpetrators of ſuch tranſactions,
‘ under the colour of our royal charters, in the realms
‘ of any European Prince, over which we have no leſs ‘ right than over thoſe of Aſia, would be deemed
‘ and treated as pirates and aſſaſſins, hanged in chains, ‘ and broken upon wheels, according to juſtice and
‘ the law of nations, and for which we moſt righte-‘ ouſly deſerve the execration, not only of the people
‘ ſo treated, but of all mankind. And we further ‘ grant to the petition of the ſaid Chriſtian Oligarchy, ‘ the rights of renouncing the laws of humanity, and ‘ exerciſing every act of perfidy, inſidiouſneſs, and ‘ cruelty, againſt all powers, and all nations in the ‘ ſaid limits of Aſia, Africa, and America, becauſe
‘ they are not Chriſtians, as we are; and that there ‘ may be the leaſt poſſible oppoſition to the tyrannic
‘ dictates and piratical intentions of the Eaſt India ‘ Company, from the feelings of humanity, the ſenſe
‘ of their own rights, as Engliſhmen, and of human ‘ nature as men, that mercy, compaſſion, juſtice, and ‘ all obligations both moral and religious, may, as ‘ much as in us lies, loſe their operation and effects
‘ on their hearts and conſciences, and not reſtrain
‘ them from thoſe acts of rapine, violence, and mur‘ der, to which they may be commanded by the ſaid
‘ Oligarchy, we further grant to the ſaid ſovereign ‘ Company the right of exerciſing military law on ‘ all our beloved ſubjects, who may be enliſted in ‘ their piratic ſervice, that is, arbitrarily to fine, im-‘ priſon, and put to death, all ſuch who may prove ‘ diſobedient to their ſanguinary orders; and this we ‘ grant, notwithſtanding it is acknowledged to be ‘ illegal and tyrannic in ourſelves, during the times ‘ of war; and that whoever ſhall be inſtrumental to
‘ the death of any ſubject, by the exertion of ſuch
‘ military law, in times of peace, will be found guilty ‘ of murder by the ſtatutes of England.

‘ And

'And that they may laviſhly reward their ſervants 'and their ſlaves for the perpetrating ſuch horrid 'and inhuman actions,' we complete their ſovereignty by giving them the right of coining money in their mints of Aſia for the accompliſhing that laudable purpoſe.

'Laſtly, to ſave appearances, and to impart to 'our people the belief of our having the welfare of 'our realms at heart, we have craftily reſerved the 'right of revoking' the aforeſaid charters, on three years notice, if they ſhall be found to be prejudicial to the public good, 'being convinced of certain 'knowledge, that the Company will be ſo enriched 'by their acts of trade, rapine, piracy, and murder, 'and that we ourſelves, our miniſters, and the Houſe 'of Commons, ſhall become ſo profeſſedly corrupt, 'profligate, venal, and abandoned, that the former 'will be enabled to purchaſe us and them, and that 'we ſhall be ready to ſell the continuance of theſe 'grants, in ſpite of a few honeſt and patriotic men, 'who may expoſe our tyranny, attempt to defend 'their country's rights, attack the deſpotiſm of our 'Aſiatic Oligarchy, and prove that the ſalvation of 'the kingdom can only be effected by the lawful de-'ſtruction of the Eaſt India Company.'

NUMBER VII.

Dec. 10. 1768.

SUCH were the unconſtitutional and oppreſſive charters which were granted by the arbitrary exertion of the prerogative royal in the deſpotic reigns of Charles and James the Second, as they are laid down in the two papers immediately preceding the preſent. By men whoſe intereſt it is to prevent the perſuaſion of theſe theſe truths from being credited by the injured people of England, the antecedent expoſition will undoubtedly be decried as rancorous and unjuſt, and publiſhed with the malevolent intention of inflaming the nation againſt the continuance of that Company, which they will confidently pronounce in no ſenſe to deſerve ſuch miſrepreſentation and calumny. In order therefore to obviate the effects which ſuch poſitive aſſertions may immediately produce on all who are not perfectly acquainted with the miſchief and inſidious deſigns which the propagators of them attempt to perpetrate, I intreat my readers to ſuſpend their concluſions on this ſubject, till I come to thoſe papers in which I ſhall attempt to prove, that every article of the grants, as explained in the expoſition, is not ſuch alone, as may be ſpeculatively inferred from the ſovereign and unlimited powers granted in the charters, but founded on the undeviating exerciſe and practice of the Eaſt India Company and their ſervants in Aſia; and if exemplifications of theſe facts be not amply adduced, in the continuation of theſe papers, beyond the power of refutation, let them condemn me for an incendiary, and an invader of the rights and privileges of men who are juſtly intitled to the enjoyment of them.

But if I ſucceed in my endeavours, and produce ſuch evidence of their unconſtitutional, arbitrary, illegal, and inhuman acts, as ought to thrill the blood of every human being with horror, and excite one univerſal deteſtation of the perpetrators, and convince the moſt obdurate heart of the truth of what has been declared to be granted in the preceding charters, will Engliſhmen, renowned for mercy to other nations, and for ſupporting their own lawful claims againſt tyrannic Kings, who have proved invaders of their antient rights, and plucked them from their thrones, remain inert and paſſive beneath the oligarchic yoke of Eaſt India Directors? Shall the little ſtate of Athens, not equal to a ſingle county of this kingdom, be for ever reverenced and admired for the ſhaking off the deſpotiſm of thirty tyrants, and we, the people of Great Britain, whoſe dominions are more extenſive than any idea which an Athenian could conceive to be contained within the limits of the world, be domineered over and enſlaved by a contemptible oligarchy of twenty-four of our fellow ſubjects! It will not be! you are not yet ſo dead to all the calls of honour, right, privilege, yourſelves, and country; the hearts of Engliſh oak will feel, though yours ſhould prove inſenſible, and grieve, although they cannot utter their complaints to this flagrant degeneracy from their antient Lords, whom their former forces bore ſo frequently through ſtorms and tempeſts to conqueſt and glory. Animated with this prophetic perſuaſion, I ſhall faithfully proceed to the proof of what I have delivered. And in this place I deſire my readers to recollect the acts of the prerogative illegally extended, of the violation of the rights, liberties, privileges, and properties of Engliſhmen, and of the ſubverſion of the conſtitution, of which the Stuarts were juſtly accuſed, and for which James the Second was ſo righteouſly expelled from the ſovereignty of theſe realms, and which are to be found in the hiſtories of thoſe reigns, and then compare them with the enormous and tyrannic grants contained in the preceding charters of the Eaſt India Company, and which, at that time, formed not a ſingle article of the accuſations againſt that King. They will then be convinced that the deſpotiſm and iniquity of theſe grants do infinitely exceed all the extravagant and illegal deeds of prerogative which animated the nation to renounce their obedience to that Sovereign, and to chace him from the throne. And yet of theſe arbitrary enormities, hiſtorians to this day have taken no notice.

I am perfectly perſuaded that thoſe uſurping men, whoſe

whoſe intereſt it is to protract and to ſuſtain their own tyranny, to continue and to rivet the chains of your enſlavement, will be active as the hungry tyger, to exert their utmoſt arts and influence to the perpetuating of thoſe grants by which they are to be enriched, and their country ruined. They will artfully and inceſſantly inſinuate and affirm, that the antecedent grants were the acts of royal prerogative, arbitrarily excited in the oppreſſive reigns of the Stuart race, when that regal power was ill underſtood and uncircumſcribed; but that, ſince the happy days of the glorious Revolution, when Liberty, like the dove, deſcended on the heads of the people of England, and all their privileges and immunities were renovated and confirmed by the Bill of Rights, and the acceſſion of our great deliverer, King William, to the diadem of theſe dominions, all theſe evils are done away; but I truſt that my countrymen will not be deluded by ſounds, but adhere to facts as they are recited. In order therefore to place that affair in its proper light, I will now proceed ſuccinctly to relate the events and tranſactions which have intervened between our Kings and the Eaſt India Company, ſince that popular æra; and then the nation may decide what advantages they have acquired, reſpecting that oligarchic tyranny, from that day to the preſent.

James being driven from the throne, and William and Mary having aſcended that abdicated ſeat, the Eaſt India Company ſtill continued in the full exerciſe of thoſe unconſtitutional grants which had been impacted in the foregoing charters; but there is reaſon to be convinced, from the Journals of the Houſe of Commons, that this continuation was not obtained without the corrupt influence of pecuniary application to the Miniſtry at leaſt: for even in the year 1688, the year of the Revolution, there is to be found in thoſe records, a ſum of 1284 l. carried to the account of ſpecial ſervice for ſupporting the welfare of the Eaſt India Company; which account is annually continued in different ſums to the years 1693 and 1694 incluſive. At this time the new charters were granted by this royal pair of deliverers, confirming all the grants contained in thoſe which have been already laid before you: and for accompliſhing this event, more than 107,000 l. were diſtributed among the Miniſters then in being.

Thus the oppreſſion and tyranny of this oligarchy was ſtill permitted by prerogative to exiſt, and the means of obtaining that power more flagrant and ſcandalous than before: and in this place, to do juſtice to the memory of that man, who was certainly expelled with juſtice, and to ſoften the exclamations of tyrant and of deſpote againſt the dead, in things where it may be juſtly allowed, and for the doing which other Princes are equally criminal, it may truly be ſaid, that it was not his acts of arbitrary power which alone dethroned him: had he acquieſced with the toleration of plundering his ſubjects, which his Miniſters would have carried into execution, notwithſtanding his ſuſpending and diſpenſing with the laws, his religion, and endeavours for introducing popery, he would have deſcended from his throne to his grave in peace, and reſted among the other Kings, his predeceſſors, in Weſtminſter-Abbey. But the corruption of the former reign was too virulent and inveterate to admit a cure, and rational parſimony was deemed at that time the moſt unpardonable of regal crimes; that anti-miniſterial diſpoſition in the King therefore aſſiſted in his being dethroned, and exiled Miniſters in ſucceeding reigns have lawleſly enjoyed the exerciſe of that rapine, for which they longed in the former. This ſhall be evinced in the next paper, wherein I ſhall delineate this whole affair of the corrupt influence of obtaining thoſe charters in the reign of William and Mary.

NUMBER VIII.

Dec. 15, 1763.

JAMES being dethroned, William placed in his room, and the Bill of Rights legiſlatively eſtabliſhed to be the lawful inheritance of all Engliſhmen, the charters of the Eaſt India Company were deemed to exceed that power which the prerogative royal could conſtitutionally exerciſe; other merchants therefore, in open defiance of theſe grants, carried on a commerce with thoſe parts of the globe which were interdicted by the regal charters. Theſe contemners of the Company's excluſive rights were diſtinguiſhed by the name of Interlopers, and no ſmall conteſt aroſe between them and the Company, on the ſubject of trading to the dominions of Aſia.

But it muſt not be imagined that thoſe vigorous opponents of the prerogative power thus illegally exerted, had undertaken this defiance of the regal charters from the generous motives of reſtoring to all Engliſhmen their juſt rights and commercial privileges; theſe men were no leſs actuated by the ſordid incentives of avarice and gain, than the Company already eſtabliſhed. They contended only for participating in the profits of that trade, and enjoying all thoſe advantages which could be derived from the arbitrary power of Kings, illegally tranſmitted to their hands; and from the enſlavement of their fellow-ſubjects, who were to be employed in the acquiring immenſe riches for thoſe interlopers; and this will appear to be inconteſtably true in the ſubſequent paper.

During this contention, between men equally determined to convert the nation's rights and powers to their ſole benefit, each party aſſiduouſly endeavoured to ſupport themſelves and defeat their adverſaries, and both were ardently engaged in preparing to apply to Parliament; the interlopers with a view to obtain a legiſlative eſtabliſhment of a new Company, and the old Company to obtain that confirmation to thoſe charters which they already poſſeſſed, or at leaſt to obtain a new grant of a charter from King William, which might impart more ſtrength and vigour to their conduct than they thought themſelves entitled to exerciſe after the Revolution.

And it will eternally happen in all revolutions which are not effected by conqueſt, whenever one motive of being weary of a ſovereign is his diſinclination to ſuffer the multitude of his people to be plundered by a few individuals; and the Prince, who ſucceeds him, neceſſarily falls into the hands of men who thirſt after power and riches, that as the latter was by them aſſiſted, he cannot, if he would, fully exert his inclinations to the prevention of ſuch corrupt practices, when he aſcends the throne. In this manner it happened after the accompliſhment of that laudable tranſaction by which James the Second was ſo juſtly driven from the dominion of theſe realms; for had William oppoſed the corrupt intentions of his miniſters, he would have inſtantly converted his moſt active adherents into his moſt virulent oppoſers. Corruption, like a flood, had now broken down the banks which formerly had contained it, and ſpread itſelf through all ranks of men; commiſſioners for hackney coaches, agents for the army, the Houſe of Commons, and the Privy Council, were all venally obedient to the mandates of thoſe who could beſt ſupply them with the wages of their iniquities.

In conſequence of this encouragement, the old Eaſt India Company begun to apply this prevalent artillery immediately after the Revolution; and in the years 1689 and 1694, the intermediate years till the end of 1694, 107,003l. were diſtributed among miniſters and members of parliament, by the old Company,

Company, in order to obtain either an act of parliament, or a charter of confirmation of their former grants; of the preceding sum, 87,400 l. were distributed among the glorious defenders of the rights, liberties, privileges, and independency of parliaments, in the year 1693, when the charter was granted on conditions therein mentioned; and 4075 l. when it was confirmed in the following year. In this manner, with pestiferous corruption added to the arbitrary exertion of illegal prerogative, the people of England were still royally interdicted from their commercial rights, and doomed to continue under the terror of military laws, despotically exercised by an illegal oligarchy, who, according to the constitution, are incapable of receiving such powers from any lawful authority in this realm of England.

Such was the open and extensive influence of bribery and corruption, in all departments, and in the House of Commons, in order to obtain the passing of such laws as the corrupters desired; that in the year 1695, Trevor the Speaker, and Hungerford, another member of that Honourable House, were expelled for having committed the most ignominious acts in receiving money for the passing of the Orphan's Bill, and the sacrificing their country's welfare to the idol of private interest.

At this time complaint being made to the House, that a member of it had received money for bringing in a Bill, it was thereupon ordered by that House, that the books of the East India Company should be inspected, and men were appointed for that purpose, in order to the laying their accounts before Parliament. In consequence of this examination, the preceding sum of 107,003 l. was found to have been given by the Governor and others, for special services not mentioned in their books. Such being the event of this research, it was then ordered, 'That Sir Thomas 'Cook, Governor of the East India Company, and a Mem-

'a Member of Parliament, do give an account to 'the Houſe of Commons, in what manner 87,400l. 'of that money was diſtributed; and as he refuſed 'to comply with that order, he was ſent priſoner to 'the Tower.'

This being done, 'A Bill was paſſed to compel 'and to indemnify Sir Thomas Cook againſt all 'actions which might be brought againſt him for the 'diſcoveries which he ſhould make.' But when a clauſe was offered to be inſerted in the Bill, 'That 'in caſe the Commiſſioners of accounts ſhould, upon 'the diſcovery of Sir Thomas Cook, adjudge that 'any of the money received by him was paid to any 'members of either Houſe, to any Privy Counſellor, 'or other officer whatſoever, ſuch perſons ſhall be 'for ever incapacitated to ſerve in parliament, or 'hold any office under his Majeſty, and ſhall alſo 'ſuffer impriſonment. And the queſtion was put 'that the clauſe ſhould be read a ſecond time; it 'paſſed in the negative.'

The Honourable Gentlemen who had driven James from the throne for diſpenſing with the laws in an arbitrary and illegal manner, and who, in the Bill of Rights, had declared, that parliaments ought to be free, were of a different opinion, when it came to be propoſed, that all thoſe, who, through the influence of bribery and corruption in that houſe, had betrayed their ſacred truſt, and been purchaſed to the deſtruction of thoſe very rights, for the defence of which they had ſo lately expelled their Sovereign, as they aſſerted. For having taſted of the ſweets of bribery, they were reſolved to cheriſh that welcome gueſt, by which they foreſaw that they and their deſcendants ſhould acquire immenſe fortunes, and riſe to honours and to titles; and this circumſtance, were there no other to be found, is ſufficient to evince, that the parſimony of the public money, and the preclusion of corrupt influence among his miniſters, were not the leaſt cauſes of his being dethroned, among the many others for which he deſerved it; for though popery and ſlavery, and arbitrary power, liberty and property, were the terms which were given to the multitude, could men ſo profligately hardened as to ſcreen the moſt ignominious betrayers of their country from condign puniſhment, be truly animated by any ſentiment of patriotiſm, or even of common honeſty? They longed for the power of ſharing in the nation's ſpoils, they now poſſeſſed, and were reſolved to perpetuate it.

Cook, being indemnified by an act of parliament, confeſſed, with much mental reſervation, that 'of 'the preceding ſum, 10,000l. had been given to Mr. 'Tyſon, to be diſpoſed of, in order to have the char-'ter confirmed with the addition of new regulations; 'that Mr. Tyſon delivered it to Sir Joſiah Child, 'who delivered it to King William, as a cuſtomary 'preſent, as the like had been done in the reign of 'Charles the Second, and in former reigns, which, 'by the books of the Company, may appear.'

Whether this does appear by thoſe books, I know not; but this I know, that the impartial continuator of Rapin's hiſtory, according to his accuſtomed adherence to truth, has ſaid that James obliged the Company to give him annually 10,000l. though the Journals of the Houſe of Commons relate it as it is above expreſſed. In this manner the glorious deliverer, who came to reſtore the rights, liberties, and privileges of Engliſhmen, defend their properties, and expel parliamentary corruption, received that ſum to confirm and to enlarge thoſe charters, which were the exertions of prerogative, more arbitrary and oppreſſive than all thoſe acts of which James the Second was ſo juſtly accuſed, and ſo deſervedly expelled.

Other ſums were entruſted with one Acton, 'which 'were given to thoſe who were to ſpeak to Members 'of Parliament, in order to obtain an Act of Par'liament in favour of the Company.' But Cook ſaid, 'he underſtood it went no further than the 'Houſe of Commons. Lord Colcheſter and the 'Marquis of Carmarthen, both Members of the 'Commons, ſhared very largely in this pecuniary 'corruption; a 1000l. was given to one Fitzpatrick, 'who ſaid he had great intereſt with Lord Notting-'ham, and had no doubt of ſerving the Company, 'provided he had ſuch a ſum of money.' But Cook, who was certainly no infidel, 'believed that Fitz-'patrick kept the money;' and yet there was 'a 'promiſe of a larger ſum if the bill paſſed.'

Five hundred and forty-five pounds were paid to one 'Squire Bates, when the charter was ſettled; and Sir Bazil Firebrace had 30,000l. and contracts to an immenſe amount with the Company, on the account of procuring a new charter, or an act of parliament; which ſums and contracts were diſtributed to ſeveral perſons.

Sir Edward Seymour was ſuppoſed to have a contract for ſalt-petre worth 10,000l. If he had it not, others had; for ſuch appeared to have been made before the Houſe of Commons.

The Lord Preſident of the King's Council, the Duke of Leeds, was accuſed of having received five thouſand guineas on this account, and was impeached of high crimes and miſdemeanors by the Houſe of Commons. He denied the charge, and then ſent Monſ. Robarts, one of his ſervants, who had received the money, ſecretly into Holland; and as he was the only perſon who could have exculpated his Grace, and as he had ſent him away, it was univerſally believed that the Duke had been guilty of the imputation. The Miniſtry, however, to do them juſtice, iſſued a proclamation for the apprehending of Monſ. Robarts, after they knew he was ſafely arrived in Holland.

During

During theſe tranſactions, in order to give the appearance of ſatisfaction to an injured people, a bill paſſed for the impriſoning of Cook, Firebrace, Bates, and Craggs; the laſt of whom had been found guilty of egregiouſly defrauding the army in their cloathing. How long they remained in durance, I do not recollect, but Craggs came abroad to be very active and inſtrumental in the deſtruction which was occaſioned by the South-Sea ſcheme; and after having twice deſerved to be hanged in chains for robbing his country, died quietly in his bed, to the great encouragement of all thoſe ſtate thieves who have ſince followed his example.

Whilſt the Commons were preparing to bring the Duke of Leeds to his trial before his Peers, and to impeach Trevor alſo, his Majeſty King William moſt graciouſly paſſed an act of free pardon, and then prorogued the Parliament; and in that manner there was an end put to all enquiry into that ſcandalous tranſaction.

Such was the iſſue of that flagrant corruption; and I am firmly convinced it was not the laſt which an Eaſt-India Company have ſpread among the Members of ſome Parliaments which have ſince that time repreſented their country. In a very late Parliament there were more than probability that men, who had been choſen to defend their country's rights, were bought to ſupport the Company. Eſtates have riſen as ſuddenly as enchanted palaces, to men who poſſeſſed no other credible means of purchaſing them than what they may have acquired by ſuch practices. However, it is to be hoped that the preſent Parliament will enquire into the iniquities of the paſt; and do honour to themſelves, and juſtice to their country.

It is high time that the truth of paſt tranſactions ſhould nakedly appear, and all parties glorioufly coincide to reſtore the honor, power, and proſperity of their country, and to emancipate themſelves and their fellow-ſubjects from the oligarchic tyranny of their fellow-ſubjects; otherwiſe it is not impoſſible but they may be fatally and experimentally taught, that an annual ſum of two millions will one day be productive of a revolution in this ſtate, of a nature very different from that in 1688; and that an oligarchy of twenty-four Directors may become the tyrants of this realm and her dominions.

NUMBER IX.

Dec. 17, 1768.

FROM the paper preceding this, it is evident beyond diſproof, that the Eaſt India Company obtained their firſt charter from King William, through the ignominious influence of bribery and corruption, widely ſpread among the Miniſtry and the Houſe of Commons: and notwithſtanding the clauſe inſerted in that charter, of its being revocable on three years notice, and the diſcovery of thoſe flagrant acts of profligacy which have been already related; neither the ſign manual of the King, nor the impreſſion of the Privy Seal was employed to that righteous purpoſe; ſuch indulgence and ſtrength had the practice of ſelling the people's rights obtained ſo ſhortly after the Revolution; in conſequence of which, both juſtice to the injured nation, and chaſtiſement to the thieves of the public, were diſpenſed with and ſuſpended.

In fact, the inquiſitorial power of the Houſe of Commons, that moſt uſeful part of our conſtitution, which has been too long delayed, and too much neglected, had been rouzed in the boſoms of a few honeſt miniſters, by the atrocious and open profligacy of members and their adherents; and the audaciouſneſs neſs of their corruption was ſo barefaced and egregious, that when the antecedent queſtion was brought into the Houſe, the importance and the iniquity of the tranſaction ſo much outweighed the numbers and the effrontery of the Miniſtry, that though they ſtill poſſeſſed the hardened reſolution of preſerving, by a negative vote, all thoſe who had voluntarily received the wages of iniquity, and betrayed their truſt; they were not ſo abſolutely impenetrable by every ſenſe of ſhame, as to preclude the bribery of the Eaſt India Company from being brought to open day-light and general execration. Such were the effects which were happily produced by a few vigilant and vigorous members of that Houſe on that notorious occaſion. And ſhall the people of England, at this time, want men who will ſtand forth to ſave themſelves and country, and to wreſt the inſtruments of arbitrary power from the hands of an unconſtitutional and uſurping oligarchy? Shall the nation, at this important hour, furniſh no ſuch patriots as the former, when the very exiſtence of the conſtitution, the power, the honour, and the happineſs of the kingdom, the rights, liberties, and privileges of the people are abſolutely dependant on the taking, for the nation's ſervice, the revenues of thoſe lands in Aſia, the poſſeſſion of which the Eaſt India Company have now the face to diſpute with their Sovereign and fellow-ſubjects?

That their pecuniary powers did ſupply them with advocates in the laſt Houſe of Commons, I will not poſitively aſſert; but as there are ſuſpicions well grounded on probable circumſtances, which indicate ſuch application and ſervice; in order to clear the ſuſpected who are innocent, and to fix the ſtigma of corruption on the guilty, let the books of that Company be now examined, as they were in the reign of King William. If this ſhould be denied, the nation will put their honeſt conſtructions on that negative;

if it be granted, and it be then evident that great ſums have been diſtributed in ſecret ſervice, the inquiſitorial power of a Houſe of Commons, exerted with integrity, can wring from the hearts of Directors and their ſervants, the names of thoſe perſons to whom theſe ſums have been given, and for what purpoſes. By this examination alſo, it will be evinced, whether they have exceeded the ſums of money to which their trade is limited by their charter; and many other deſirable and neceſſary diſcoveries may be made. But ſhould an enquiry into the Company's affairs be eluded by the concealment of theſe books which may reveal their tranſactions, there will then need no other evidence to pronounce the reaſon of it: for the tranſactions of juſt and upright men can want no ſubterfuge nor ſecreting from the national inqueſt; they juſtify themſelves by their own evidence, and impart an honour to all who have been concerned in them.

Though the charter of confirmation, and of other indulgent grants, was obtained by the Company in the honorable manner already related, the interlopers were by no means intimidated before the exploſion of the corrupt influence by which it was effected, from purſuing their commercial intereſts in the interdicted regions of the earth. They valued the prerogative royal of King William, thus exerted, no more than the Papal authority which had been exerted to a ſimilar purpoſe; and they boldly aſſerted that no King of England was empowered to grant ſuch indulgences in trade to one part of his ſubjects, at the excluſion of the other; and they inſiſted that ſuch grants in him were the more extraordinary, becauſe to his declaration, he came profeſſedly to reſtore thoſe rights and liberties which had been invaded in preceding reigns, and had been exalted to the ſovereignty of thoſe dominions on the conſtitutional conditions contained in Magna Charta; though they were expreſſed in the Bill of Rights in ſuch flimſy and evaneſcent terms, as if they were, even at that time, not intended to be obſerved.

The Company vigorouſly oppoſed the Interlopers; and the latter, ſtung by the luſt of wealth, though inſenſible to the voice of univerſal Liberty, excited by the diſcovery of the Company's corrupting, and encouraged by the Miniſters being corrupted, hoped to acquire the means of being eſtabliſhed into a Company on a foundation more plauſible, in appearance, though equally arbitrary and deſtructive in its intention and effects, with the charter already granted.

At this time that baneful contagion of exceeding the annual ſupplies, by borrowing millions, on taxes to be laid for the payment of the intereſt of thoſe ſums, had infected the robuſt conſtitution of England, and which hath ſince diffuſed its gangrenous powers through the whole body of the ſtate, and reduced her to her preſent mortification and impotence. The Interlopers being well acquainted with the miniſterial want of money, for the ſupplies of the year, propoſed to the adminiſtration the lending two millions, in return for being legiſlatively eſtabliſhed into a Company: this was readily accepted by the Miniſtry; and notwithſtanding the oppoſition that was made to it in both Houſes of parliament by the old Company, an act was paſſed, authoriſing the King to grant a charter to the Interlopers; and this he did in the face of that excluſive charter which he had previouſly granted to the other Company, and for which he had received from them ten thouſand pounds.

It was now the mode for the miniſters to pronounce that the Crown had no prerogative-right of granting excluſive charters, and yet the charter which had been ſo granted to the Old Company ſtill remained in equal vigour as before; and thus there were two charters excluſive of each other, and both repugnant to the conſtitution, and ſubverſive of the rights rights and liberties of the people. But inconſiſtencies and contradictions in national meaſures were the characteriſticks of thoſe times, and are not yet extirpated in the preſent. The people of England had dethroned King James, becauſe he was a Papiſt, and they did right; and they had crowned King William to ſupport the Proteſtant intereſt; and yet this Proteſtant King had, by this time, entered into an alliance with the Emperor and the Dutch, and undertaken a war, proteſting before God that his intentions were, never to conclude a peace with Lewis the Fourteenth, till he had made reparation to the Holy See for whatever he had acted againſt it, and had annulled all thoſe infamous proceedings againſt Holy Father Innocent the Eleventh; an admirable exemplification of attachment to the Proteſtant religion, by a Prince who had dethroned his father for being a Papiſt.

The New Eaſt India Company was thus eſtabliſhed in conſequence of an act of parliament, and becauſe the Interlopers would not lend their money on leſs than national ſecurity. Yet during this time, one popular clamour was, No Popery, No Slavery, though the Proteſtants of England were raiſed to fight, and the people and their poſterity mortgaged by their repreſentatives, to pay theſe troops which were waſting their blood in ſupport of the Papal ſupremacy over the King of France; and the other was Liberty and Property, though the ſame guardians of their rights had granted to the King the authority of granting to an oligarchy of twenty-four ſubjects, more than the prerogatives of ſovereignty which belong to an Engliſh King; had doomed their fellow-ſubjects to the deſpotiſm of military law, and to be reſcinded from their unalienable privileges of encreaſing their property by commerce, wherever it could be extended, according to the laws of nations. Such were the men who had juſt perfected a Revolution in favour of the Liberties of Engliſhmen.

What

What ſums of money his Majeſty King William, our glorious Deliverer, and his uncorruptible miniſtry, might receive on the occaſion of this grant, I know not; but ſince both he and they coincided to grant another excluſive charter, which was certainly derogatory to that prerogative by which he had granted the former, I am perſuaded the miniſtry again taſted the ſweets of bribery and corruption, the love of which has hitherto encreaſed, in proportion as the luſcious draught has been repeated.

Notwithſtanding this power of granting charters to the Eaſt India Company was thus imparted to the King by an act of the legiſlature, I am nevertheleſs convinced that the repreſentatives of the people have no more conſtitutional authority than the King alone, to preclude their conſtituents from their juſt rights, to ſet up a deſpotic and military power in a ſelect Company, to ſuſpend the laws of England, and grant them the power of making laws for their ſervants, to reſcind their ſervants from applying to the Judges of England; and to give that Company the power of appointing ſuch Judges as they pleaſe; to ſubject the whole community to be ſeduced and kidnapped to become their ſoldiers, and permit the Company to raiſe that money which is to pay them for their ſervice; nor to grant all thoſe rights of ſovereignty, which, by the conſtitution, are incommunicable to any man or ſet of men whatever, by any conſtitutional authority in England.

For in what view, conſiſtent with common ſenſe, and the idea of a free nation, can the ſervants of the people be delegated to give to the King the right of granting to twenty-four of his ſubjects every thing which conſtitutes the exiſtence of right and liberty? The being of a repreſentative depends on his defence of the people from oppreſſion and arbitrary power, the contrary notion is ſubverſive of all idea of repreſentation; and thoſe who preſumed to give up the people's rights in the preceding act were betrayers of their truſt, and traitors to the conſtitution. No man, much leſs a whole nation, can delegate to another that right which he or they poſſeſs not in themſelves: did ever a people therefore intend to ſubject themſelves to the will and actions of their ſervants, and impart to them the authority of their deſtroying them, and enſlaving them and their poſterity?

Could theſe conſtituents have legally imparted ſuch power to their repreſentatives, by electing them, nine parts in ten who have no votes, and are yet entitled to equal freedom, can never be ſuppoſed to have given them that authority.

I know it is a common aſſertion, that in all governments, abſolute power muſt reſide ſomewhere; but the rectitude of this opinion I deny. It is excluded from the conſtitution of England, as it is by the laws of nature; for though the Commons have an abſolute power to do right, they have it not to do wrong; for being the ſervants of the public, and guardians of their liberties, they cannot, either in the nature of ſervice of repreſentation, or of the conſtitution, be authorized to betray their truſt, to invade the rights, or to enſlave their conſtituents. Laws may be made of this ſort, and men may acquieſce in them, but they are nevertheleſs ſubverſive of all that is or ought to be dear to a free people.

This declaration may probably be repugnant to the narrow ſentiments of contracted lawyers, who in all their opinions are led by the ſlender thread of the ſtatutes, and ſee nothing in the wide expanſe of native right, and of the conſtitution. Dr. Blackſtone, indeed, declares, that the power of parliament is abſolute; but as this power cannot be exerted without the repreſentatives of the people, has he not ſet up a paſſive obedience in the maſters to their ſervants? and enjoined a ſilence into acquieſcence with whatever acts their delegates may inſtitute, however unjuſt and oppreſſive?

preſſive? A paſſive obedience more to be dreaded than that to Kings, which has been long exploded. But in oppoſition to this law opinion, I ſhall tranſcribe that of Mr. Locke.

'Though the legiſlature, whether placed in one or 'more, whether it be always in being, or only by 'intervals, though it be the ſupreme power in every 'commonwealth, yet it is not, nor can poſſibly be 'abſolutely arbitrary over the lives and fortunes of 'the people; for it being but the joint power of 'every member of the ſociety, given up to that per-'ſon or that aſſembly, which is legiſlator, it can be 'no more than thoſe perſons had in a ſtate of nature 'before they entered into ſociety, and gave up to the 'community; for nobody can transfer to another 'more power than he has in himſelf; and nobody has 'an abſolute arbitrary power over himſelf, or over 'any other, to deſtroy his own life, or take away the 'life, liberty, or property of another. Their power, 'in the utmoſt bounds of it, is limited to the public 'good of the ſociety. It is a power that hath no 'other end but preſervation, and therefore can never 'have a right to deſtroy, enſlave, or deſignedly to 'impoveriſh the ſubjects.'

And again: 'Though in a conſtituted common-'wealth, ſtanding upon its own baſis, and acting 'according to its own nature, there can be but one 'ſupreme power, which is the legiſlature, to which 'all the reſt are, and muſt be ſubordinate; yet the 'legiſlature, being only a fiduciary power to act for 'certain ends, there ſtill remains in the people a ſu-'preme power to remove or alter the legiſlature, 'when they find the legiſlature act contrary to the 'truſt repoſed in them: for all power given, with 'truſt, for the attaining an end, being limited by that 'end, wherever that end is manifeſtly refuted or op-'poſed, the truſt muſt neceſſarily be forfeited, and 'the power devolves into the hands of thoſe that

'gave it, who may place it a-new, where they ſhall 'think beſt for their ſafety and ſecurity. And thus 'the community perpetually retains a ſupreme power 'of ſaving themſelves from the attempts and deſigns 'of any body, even of their legiſlators, whenever 'they ſhall be ſo fooliſh or ſo wicked, as to lay and 'carry on deſigns againſt the liberties and properties 'of the ſubject; for no man, or ſociety of men, hav-'ing a power to deliver up their preſervation, or 'conſequently the means of it, to the abſolute will 'and arbitrary dominion of another, whenever any 'one ſhall go about to bring them into ſuch a ſlaviſh 'condition, they will always have a right to preſerve 'what they have not a power to part with, and to 'rid themſelves of thoſe who invade this fundamen-'tal, ſacred, and unalterable law of ſelf-preſervation, 'for which they entered into ſociety.'

Such are the different opinions of Blackſtone and Locke; and let my readers now conſider, which of them is moſt conſentaneous to the nature of man, the laws of God, and the conſtitution of the realm; and then determine on what grounds of delegated authority the repreſentatives of the people preſumed to impart, by act of parliament, the power of granting ſo tyrannical a charter to the Eaſt India Company. And then I would aſk the advocates of Dr. Blackſtone, if ſuch there be, whether the ſame abſolute power which enacted the above law, ſo deſtructive of our national right, has not at preſent an equal power to abrogate it for the ſalvation of the community? And whether a true patriot member can refuſe his utmoſt endeavour to reſtore his conſtituents to their ancient rights, and the kingdom to its former power and conſideration?

NUMBER X.

IN my laſt paper I have ſhewn to my fellow ſubjects, that their repreſentatives can never be legally authoriſed by this conſtitution to enact ſuch ſtatutes as are ſubverſive of thoſe rights, which, by the laws of nature, and of the ſocial compact of Engliſhmen they are entitled to enjoy. I ſhall now proceed to examine the powers which were given by the Commons in parliament to King William, with permiſſion to erect a New Eaſt India Company, and whether theſe powers by which they enabled him to make ſuch grants, were ſuch as they had a juſt title to transfer to his hands, with the further right of imparting them by charter to any company of men in this kingdom, excluſive of the other ſubjects, and with a participation to foreigners.

As this ſingular ſtatute, made in the year 1689, by which the Sovereign of this realm has been empowered to inſtitute a New Company by charter (an Old Company erected by royal prerogative ſtill ſubſiſting) is the firſt of that kind which is to be found in the annals of England; I ſhall examine into the moſt material privileges which were given him by this act of the legiſlature, and into thoſe which were granted by the King to that Company in conſequence of it. And here it is to be obſerved, that it was impracticable, conſtitutionally, to erect a New Company by prerogative power; becauſe all the efficacy which could be exerted by that power was exhauſted in the charter granted to the Old Company. For the King having granted ſuch privileges to them alone, and having excluded all his other ſubjects from interfering in, or violating the rights which were therein granted, had, through his own mere motion and certain tain knowledge, precluded himſelf from exerciſing his prerogative to a ſimilar purpoſe, unleſs by three years notice he had revoked the grants which he had already made; and this he had not done. For unleſs ſuch grants are preclufive to the power of granting the indulgencies by the King to others, they are, in fact, no grants at all: and I ſuppoſe the Old Eaſt India Company would not have given him ten thouſand pounds, and one hundred thouſand more to his miniſters, for the obtaining that charter, the validity of which was ſuſceptible of being annihilated by a ſingle breath of his Majeſty.

This charter, therefore, being granted in conſequence of legiſlative, and not of prerogative conceſſions, the particular powers which are contained in that act are ſuch only as the King was enabled to impart to the New Company; and all ſuch particular grants as exceed the letter and the limits of the law, are a violent and an arbitrary proceeding, and altogether unwarrantable; though ſome of them ſhould be ſuch as had been prerogatively exerciſed by preceding Princes.

Two millions being now to be raiſed to carry on the war in ſupport of the Pope and the Devil, or the Dutch, for the two laſt are equally friends and allies of this kingdom, the loyal and dutiful Commons, as it is expreſſed in the act, moſt humbly preſented his Majeſty with a further gift of duties which were to be laid on ſalt; and thus this univerſal and moſt uſeful neceſſary of life to all ranks of the community, and more particularly to the indigent and induſtrious, was firſt taxed by a Proteſtant Parliament for the ſupport of a Popiſh war, and to enable the King to erect an oligarchy of tyrants, which it is not impoſſible, may one day, dethrone the very family which he placed in the ſovereignty of England and her dominions. The intereſt of theſe two millions was to be at the rate of eight per cent.

and for the payment of it, the manufacturer, the husbandman, artist, artizan, and all others, were doomed to encrease their daily toil, or to be deprived of the means of purchasing that necessary at the price to which it is now advanced. Besides this, the very produce of the earth was rendered less easily to be obtained, and more precarious, because the farmer was, by this duty on salt, rescinded from that fertilizing manure which had been applied with such abundant advantage to that purpose before the erection of that baneful Company.

Ministers were now become more crafty, and Kings less pertinacious than heretofore, in the perpetrating of unjustifiable measures, by acts of prerogative arbitrarily exerted. On this account, wherever an intention was adopted of oppressing the people, they evaded the old method of regal power, and applied to the Commons for the obtaining such statutes as would accomplish their iniquitous designs; and a majority of these faithful protectors of the rights of Englishmen were seldom unresponsive to ministerial application and purposes; and by these means such oppressive acts, more particularly in the laying of taxes, have been accomplished, as the most profligate Minister would not have dared to advise, nor the most arbitrary monarch to have carried into execution by his sole mandate. And, for the truth of this assertion, I desire my readers to compare the taxes which have been laid by the former representatives of this people, with those which have been imposed on the other nations of Europe, by the most absolute and most remorseless of their sovereigns.

And here it is obvious to the discernment of all who will presume to think, how little the multitude are influenced by the reality of the truth of things, and how easy they are led captive by the delusion of names and appearances. These oppressive acts were not considered to be the exertions of despotic power, because becauſe they were inſtituted by their Repreſentatives; as if the name and mode could alter the nature and depravity of the deed, or alleviate the anguiſh of the ſuffering. And they were ſilently obeyed, becauſe the makers of them had been choſen by themſelves to defend them from injurious treatment. And thus the very reaſons which ought to have rendered ſuch betrayers of their truſt, theſe mortgages of the people and their poſterity, to ſuch ignominious purpoſes, ten times more execrable than if the ſame effects had been obtained by regal power, were conſidered as arguments for ſilently acquieſcing with ſuch ſtatutes; and by theſe means the laws of England in various inſtances are become the moſt tremendous inſtruments of deſpotiſm in the hands of Miniſters; for laws are inexorable, and even the momentary relentings of a tyrant's heart are precluded from ſuch cruel inſtitutes.

By this act his Majeſty King William was empowered, 'by commiſſion under the Great Seal of 'England, to authoriſe and appoint any number of 'perſons to take and receive all ſuch voluntary 'ſubſcriptions, as ſhall be made by or for any per-'ſon or perſons, natives or FOREIGNERS, towards 'the raiſing the ſum of two millions, and to incor-'porate them into all the privileges of this Company.' In this inſidious manner the delegated guardians of the rights and liberties of Engliſhmen, not only deprived, as far as in them lay, their fellow ſubjects from thoſe commercial privileges to which by Magna Charta they are intitled, but even broke down the conſtitutional mound, and let in that inundation of foreigners into this Company, who have ſince well nigh overwhelmed all thoſe advantages which were to be derived from that trade, and from which the nation in general was barbarouſly precluded. In this manner the predilection of the Dutch, which diſgraced the adminiſtration of that reign, was ſignally manifeſted, and iniquitouſly prevailed, notwithſtanding it was righteouſly and vigorouſly oppoſed by many honeſt members of both Houſes, the majority of whom was ſo flagrantly abandoned.

Of this Company there were to be annually elected Twenty-four Truſtees, by way of ballot, who are now called Directors; and theſe at no great diſtance, without the vigilance and activity of all ranks of the community, will become Dictators; for they have already uſurped the power of that unlimited magiſtrate, as it was occaſionally exerciſed in Rome, when free, through all the dominions of Aſia, Africa, and America, wherever they have obtained a ſettlement; and ſhould they be unconſtitutionally indulged with retaining the conquered lands of Aſia, one fourth part of that revenue which they produce, will inevitably fix them perpetual Dictators, alike in England as in India; and it will prove as impracticable to prevent the ſun from riſing, as to preclude the influence of five hundred thouſand pounds, much leſs of two millions annually, to be diſtributed by Directors, among ſuch men as receive the wages of corruption in the grant of the former charter, in the reign of King William; and as the Roman legions, by the incitements of their Perpetual Dictator, and the luſt of gold, were ſeduced and inſtigated to enſlave their country, and to make him their tyrant, ſuch may, in like manner, be the event of theſe in England, without that vigilance and vigor, which, by the imminence of the danger, is now abſolutely neceſſary to be exerted by every Britiſh ſubject who is reſolved to live and die a free man, to be loyal to his King, and to defend himſelf and his poſterity in their juſt claims and properties. For this is one eternal truth, that ſhould the Company be permitted to retain thoſe revenues, the luſt of power on the one ſide, and the luſt of money on the other, will furniſh them with men, who by votes or arms, will certainly effectuate any deſpotic purpoſes.

'By this law all perſons who were concerned or 'traded, whether in the Company or by licence, are 'to ſwear not to trade for more than the ſum of two 'millions: and all their factors, agents, and ſervants, were to ſwear fidelity to the Company.' Beſides theſe particulars, the faithful Commons empowered the King to grant them 'the privilege of 'making bye-laws, as they ſhould think proper for 'the government of their ſervants, and all others, 'who might diſregard or infract the privileges to be 'granted in the charter; and to inflict penalties and 'puniſhments, by impriſonments, mulcts, fines, and 'amerciaments, for any breach of thoſe laws; and 'to levy ſuch fines, &c. to the uſe of the Company 'reſpectively: and they had the privilege of borrowing money, not exceeding their capital, under 'their common ſeal. And whoever ſhould preſume 'to trade in the parts interdicted by the charter, 'were to forfeit all goods, ſhips, &c. and double the 'value of them; one fourth to the informer, and the 'reſt to the Company. This act imparted the power 'granting them the above privileges for twelve years, 'and the charter was alſo capable of being revoked 'on three years notice.'

Such were the powers with which this perfidious Houſe of Commons unconſtitutionally inveſted the King, in order to grant them to a few of his ſubjects, to Dutchmen, Danes, and all nations who are incapable by the very fundamental principles of the conſtitution to receive them; and notwithſtanding which, they have continually participated in thoſe advantages, to the excluſion of the Britiſh nation in general.

Enormous as this Act muſt appear to all conſiderate men, this was not the whole of that miſchief which it contained. Not content with ſubjecting all who who might ſerve under theſe lordly maſters to arbitrary ſway, depriving all thoſe of their lawful rights of commerce who might dare to traffic in thoſe interdicted parts, and making them obnoxious to their arbitrary laws, they now in the ſame ſtatute enact, 'That a duty of five per cent. above all other duties, 'ſhall be laid on the true and real value of all goods 'and merchandize, product and growth of the Eaſt 'Indies, and all the interdicted parts, for the uſe of 'the ſaid Company,' in order to 'maintain ſuch Em-'baſſadors or other Miniſters, as his Majeſty, at the 'nomination of the Directors, ſhall be pleaſed to ſend 'to any Emperor, Prince, or State, within the parts 'aforeſaid, or to defray any other expences: the 'ſurplus to remain with the Company.'

And in this manner, and by theſe means, as all taxes are ultimately paid by the conſumers of thoſe commodities on which they are placed, the good people of England were doomed to pay a duty of five per cent. on ſuch goods, in ſupport of an oligarchy trade and advantages from which they were excluded, and of which foreigners were allowed to participate equally with the Company itſelf; and thus by adding five per cent. duty, to eight per cent. intereſt, and ſuppoſing their imports equal to their capital, they were allowed thirteen per cent. intereſt for the loan of two millions.

Such were the ſignal examples of truſt and fidelity to their charge, which were manifeſted by the repreſentatives of the people in that honourable Houſe of Commons; men of revolution principles, reſtorers of the nation's rights, and enemies of arbitrary power. Could theſe Commons of England, elected by the people to preſerve their rights, be conſtitutionally authoriſed to tax the community, in order to ſupply the exigencies of a tyrannic oligarchy, and for the ſupport of a trade from which theſe very repreſentatives have excluded their conſtituents? Will even Dr. Blackſtone ſtand forth the advocate of ſuch authority delegated to that houſe? If he does, let us hear no more of execrating the Tories, for being the ſupporters of paſſive obedience to a Sovereign, if we muſt implicitly yield it to our ſervants. Such principles are infinitely more ignominious and more ſlaviſh than the former; for if thoſe Commons had an authority to tax the people for the ſupport of the Eaſt India Company, they had an equal right to tax them for their own ſupport and benefit: and if they could take a duty of five per cent. from the property of the community, and apply it to the uſe of that Company, they could take from the ſame people all they poſſeſſed, and apply it to their own purpoſes; for the quantity of the money makes no difference, 'tis the act of taking and applying any ſum in the preceding manner, which conſtitutes the tyranny of the tranſgreſſion. If ſuch power be conſtitutionally in the Commons, no man can conceive his property to be ſafe: more eſpecially if ſuch repreſentatives ſhould once more fill that Houſe, as thoſe who doomed their conſtituents to the payment of that duty to ſuch uſes and to ſuch dictators.

To levy money by Royal mandate, without conſent of the Commons, is diametrically oppoſite to the Great Charter and the Bill of Rights, even tho' it be applied to the ſervice of the State. Were theſe Commons then entitled to levy money on the people, for the ſervice of a Company which precludes the people from their rights, and threatens deſtruction alike to the King and kingdom? The former has been execrated and aboliſhed; the latter, I am perſuaded, will not long ſurvive. Such privileges, whether granted by the King or the Commons, whether obtained by laws or by the Prerogative Royal, are equally unjuſtifiable, arbitrary, and unconſtitutional; and this notwithſtanding by the former method it has the ſeductive appearance of being legal, and by the the latter it impacts a conviction of its being unlawful and deſpotic. Such was the event of this tranſaction, the interlopers denied that the King could equally grant an excluſive charter, and then received the ſame grants from his hands, becauſe they were transferred to him by the ſervants of the public, who had leſs right to give him that power than he to exerciſe it, before the granting the firſt charter which precluded him from all pretext of granting the ſecond: and in this manner thoſe vigorous friends of liberty and right, thoſe opponents of the former grants, moſt conſcientiouſly accepted the charter, which rendered them abſolute and tyrannic over their fellow-ſubjects in Aſia, and now threatens to effect the like deſpotiſm in England.

NUMBER XI.

Dec. 24, 1768.

THE powers which were ſpecifically imparted by the ſtatute which enabled King William to grant a charter to a New Eaſt India Company, being ſuch as are previouſly related; the faithful repreſentatives of the people, ever watchful of their rights and tenacious of their liberties, added to the antecedent particulars (ſingular and extenſive as they may appear) one other clauſe which inſtantaneouſly demoliſhed all the bulwarks of the nation's rights, and permitted the King, with unlimited power, to act as he pleaſed reſpecting the grants which he might beſtow on this Company; and this they effected in the ſubſequent terms: "And it ſhall and may be lawful to and for his Majeſty, by letters patent under the Great Seal of England, to incorporate all ſuch ſubſcribers ſcribers to be one Company, with powers to chuſe their own managers, or directors, and officers, and to grant ſuch other powers and clauſes, as ſhall be neceſſary or requiſite for the carrying on of ſuch trade; or ſhall be reaſonable for his Majeſty to grant; and the directors or managers, and other members of the ſame, ſhall be ſubject to ſuch farther rules, qualifications, and appointments, as his Majeſty, in their charter, ſhall think reaſonable to be inſerted."

This was a glorious and munificent addition of the Commons of England to the powers which they had ſpecifically imparted by the ſame act. And it not only filled, but heaped the meaſure of their iniquities; and which, notwithſtanding the proviſo of granting ſuch powers only as ſhall be reaſonable for his Majeſty to grant, does abſolutely annihilate that reſtriction, by empowering the King to grant to the Company all ſuch rules, qualifications, and appointments, as he ſhall think reaſonable and neceſſary to be inſerted in the charter; and between theſe two reaſonables there might poſſibly be no ſmall difference. By this ſingle clauſe of treacherous indulgence, all the liberties and privileges of Engliſhmen, reſpecting their commercial rights eſtabliſhed by Magna Charta, of trading to all parts of the globe; together with thoſe of freedom of perſon, of encreaſing their property, and even of keeping that property already poſſeſſed, were by the Commons given to the King, to ſuſpend or diſpenſe with, as he ſhould think reaſonable. And thus a ſtatute was enacted to enable King William to do thoſe very deeds of ſuſpenſion and diſpenſation of laws for which King James had moſt righteouſly been expelled the kingdom; and thoſe powers which had been illegal in the prerogative, were now made lawful by parliament, and rendered irrevocable by the Commons to all eternity: for the enacting this law depended on their conſent; but the revocation of it on that of the King and his ſucceſſors. For whatever bills might have been

been paſſed in the Commons, to reclaim the powers they had given away, it was in the hands of the King to prevent their being carried into a law by his negative, and that negative he gave on other occaſions. Such were the deeds of men delegated by the nation to preſerve them in freedom, right, and property; in defence of which they ought to have ſacrificed their lives, and for which deſertion of their duty they ought to have been executed, as betrayers of their truſt, and traitors to the conſtitution.

For certainly, according to the precepts of ſacred writ, which ſays, put not your truſt in Princes, King William, however, in wiſdom he might be deemed ſuperior to thoſe ſovereigns who reigned before him, was not infallible in his judgment, or inſuſceptible of being deluded or miſled by inſidious and ſelf-intereſted miniſters. That conduct, therefore, which his Majeſty or his minions might think reaſonable to grant, might poſſibly be unreaſonable in itſelf, and the ſanction of ſuſpending and diſpenſing with the laws which was thus imparted, was a ſacrilegious and unpardonable act in men who had juſtly ſent their late Sovereign into exile, for having illegally exerted that arbitrary power. And thus they erected, by parliamentary authority, that power of prerogative in Kings, reſpecting this pernicious Company, and made that lawful which they had formerly inſiſted to be deſpotic, and not to be entruſted to the hands of ſovereigns.

But the miniſters of the King were encreaſed in wiſdom by the antecedent experience of thoſe diſcoveries which were made by the inquiſitorial authority of the Houſe of Commons, into their former crimes of bribery and corruption; and though they at that time prevailed, in defeating the honeſt intention of puniſhing them for their ſins, they reſolved no more to riſque the danger of a diſcovery, and to confide in the attachment of their dependants in parliament, for for their ſafety. On this account they obtained the preceding clauſe from the Commons, that the King ſhould have the right of inſerting in the charter ſuch rules, qualifications, and appointments, as he ſhould think reaſonable, and thus effectually ſecured themſelves from every parliamentary enquiry into their conduct; for by this cunning device, that Houſe of Commons had cleverly precluded themſelves from the exerciſe of their inquiſitorial power, as far as it related to all things tranſacted by the King, his heirs and ſucceſſors, in regard to the Eaſt India Company.

For it would have been the moſt ſignal abſurdity and contradiction for thoſe repreſentatives to have called to account, arraigned, or impeached, the miniſters of King William, for the adviſing ſuch rules, qualifications, and appointments as his Majeſty had thought reaſonable to be granted, becauſe they had papally granted to him the plenary indulgence of inſerting what he ſhould think reaſonable; and as no proof of his Majeſty's thinking any power unreaſonable which he might concede, could be derived but from the boſom, and the diſcovery of the King alone, it bears no plauſible appearance that the ſame ſovereign would condemn, as unreaſonable, what he had granted as reaſonable, and arraign his own or his miniſter's underſtanding and integrity, or give his aſſent to any bill which might be paſſed through the Commons for the revoking that clauſe in the preceding ſtatute, and thereby lay open his miniſters to parliamentary inquiry, for adviſing that conduct which he had thought reaſonable to adopt, and thoſe grants which he had conſequently, by charter, imparted to the Eaſt India Company. And in this deteſtable manner, and by theſe nefarious means, the miniſters were, by the act and deed of the Houſe of Commons, guarantied by law from all danger of enquiry; and all legal reſtraint and apprehenſion of chaſtiſement, for the iniquities which they might perpetrate reſpecting that charter, and that Company, was, by this deſtructive inſtitute, as effectually removed from their hearts, as integrity had been from their conſciences, when they perfidiouſly ſold the nation's rights and freedom to the Old Company.

And thus, in this inſidious manner, by authority of the Commons, the high road of corruption and ſelf-intereſt was parliamentarily levelled and made ſafe for the exerciſe of the moſt execrable of all robbers, the robbers of their country's rights, privileges, and liberties; and every barrier of law and of the conſtitution, which had been erected to prevent ſuch national felonies, was by the very centinels ordained to guard them, infamouſly thrown open, that no poſſible impediment might ſubſiſt which might either diſcourage their perpetrating ſuch acts, or retard their eſcape from juſtice; and by their connivance they were let looſe to the commiſſion of every deed of depredation and rapine which they might think reaſonable for his Majeſty to think reaſonable to be inſerted; and in thoſe days the plunder of the ſtate was miniſterial reaſon. And in this manner the guardians of the people had, irrevocably, by their power, conveyed to the King the illegal and unconſtitutional means of ſecuring his miniſters from puniſhment, for whatever tranſgreſſions they might commit againſt the people's rights, freedom, and commercial privileges, in favour of the Eaſt India Company.

From the origin of the conſtitution to that fatal day, no act ſo replete with miſchief, and ſo communicative of arbitrary power to the ſovereign on the throne, had ever been inſtituted; thoſe excepted which had been paſſed by the Commons in the reign of Henry the Eighth: then, indeed, your repreſentatives ignominiouſly enacted, that the King's Proclamation ſhould poſſeſs the force and vigour of the laws, and impowered his Majeſty to leave his dominions and his ſovereignty to whom he might pleaſe by his laſt Will to nominate and appoint. And the people were abſolutely enſlaved by the act and deed of the guardians of their liberties. By this law in the reign of King William, the Commons imparted to the King the permiſſion of granting by his charters, all thoſe powers and prerogatives which are included both in the executive and legiſlative departments of government, himſelf yet living. And theſe powers, in conſequence of this, and of ſubſequent acts, have erected that Company into a tyranny, unknown to this conſtitution; and which, wherever they reſide, and whatever be the form of government, whether in one, in a few, in many, or in the repreſentatives of all, includes every thing that can be denominated tyranny in the heads, and enſlavement on the ſubject. But theſe diſgraceful and oppreſſive acts of that ſervile and miſcreant Houſe of Commons, in the days of that tyrant Henry the Eighth, were repealed in the ſucceeding reign; and the conſtitution was reſtored to its ancient dignity in that reſpect; but the ſtatute enacted in the reign of King William, not only ſubſiſts with full vigour at this day, but has been ſtrengthened and encreaſed by other acts in ſucceeding Houſes of Commons. Will Dr. Blackſtone, who aſſerts, and truly, that the King cannot ſuſpend or diſpenſe with the laws in an unconſtitutional manner, perſiſt in declaring that thoſe Commons have an abſolute authority to tranſact ſuch things? and that the people ſhall paſſively obey their ſervants, which they incapacitated themſelves from repealing, without the conſent of the King and the Houſe of Lords? and abſolutely renounced and ſurrendered the eſſential duty of ſaving their conſtituents from deſpotiſm and oppreſſion?

But the auſpicious day is now approaching, the repreſentatives of the people are now rouzed from the lethargic ſupineneſs and corrupt indulgence of their pre-predeceſſors. The exerciſe of thoſe arbitrary powers by the Company in the realms of Aſia, though unattended to in their origin and progreſs, whilſt they were operating inſenſibly on the national welfare, which inattention is eternally the conſequence of miſchief, however enormous, when tranſacted in regions only far remote, has now, by the arrogant uſurpation of that Company, in retaining the Aſiatic lands and revenues from the King and from the ſtate, brought the danger and the dread of that power into the midſt of this kingdom. The nation has taken the alarm, and the demolition of their deſpotiſm, the ſalvation of the ſtate, and the freedom of the people from their enſlaving directors, are well nigh arrived to their completion.

The patriotic ſucceſſors of thoſe perfidious Commons will, I am confident, obliterate the ignominy of thoſe, who, in former reigns, have betrayed their truſt, and ſacrificed the liberty of the people and the conſtitution of the kingdom; and in the perfecting this laudable event, they will undoubtedly be aſſiſted by every honeſt Briton, be gratefully thanked by the whole community, and the honour of having delivered their country from perdition and ſlavery will be eternally affixed to their names and characters. Succeeding generations will bleſs their memory, and on the anniverſary of the day, in the month of of the year , they will pour their ſacred libations to the immortal remembrance of that auſpicious day, and of thoſe who ſaved them; and enthuſiaſtically pronounce to their gazing children, 'On 'this propitious day the Britiſh nation was happily 'delivered from the arbitrary power of the Eaſt India 'Oligarchy, and reſtored to freedom; and be this 'day everlaſtingly conſecrated and remembered by 'you and your poſterity.' Old age ſhall pronounce theſe words with exultation; puerility and juveneſcence ſhall hear and repeat them with delight and rapture; and one univerſal ſound of thankful reminiſcence ſhall fill the wide extended realms of England, and things inanimate reverberate the joyful accents. Theſe are the rewards which men deſerve who have delivered their country from thraldom: theſe are the oblations which a grateful nation will offer up to patriotiſm; and theſe acts, in the Houſe of Commons, will be conſecrated into permanency and law, by that Sovereign who is incapable of pronouncing that negative which can retard his people's happineſs.

NUMBER XII.

Dec. 27, 1768.

TO the clauſes already mentioned in the preceding act of parliament, there is yet another which deſerves to be attended to; and it is, "That on the payment of two millions, three years after notice, the Company ſhall ceaſe." And this alternative, relating to the payment of that ſum, neceſſarily ſprung from the loan of the two millions with which the Company had then firſt ſupplied the government. By theſe means, the nation has on their repreſentatives a juſt claim of redemption from their oppreſſion and injuries; and I truſt it will not be denied, but it ſtill remained in the King to fruſtrate, by his negative, every act by which that ſum might be raiſed to diſcharge the public debt to the Eaſt India oligarchy. As that privilege of redemption has not yet been carried into execution, the aſcendancy of Miniſters over their maſters has never been brought to an experiment in that inſtance. Such is the firſt law that was ever granted in favour of this Aſiatic Company; and ſuch was the firſt King who received from the legiſlative body the right of granting ſuch unbounded powers to any ſet of men: for he was left unlimited but by his own reaſon; a guide in Kings, to which it will eternally prove fatal to truſt the whole happineſs and freedom of a nation.

I will now enquire into the powers and privileges which King William by charter granted to the Eaſt India Company, in conſequence of that unbounded ſovereignty with which he had been inveſted by the Commons.

By this charter the ſubſcribers were incorporated into one Company, by the name of the Engliſh Company trading to the Eaſt Indies: and this new and apt appellation of Engliſh, was adopted, I ſuppoſe, as lucus is derived a non lucendo, becauſe the Company was open to all nations equally with the Engliſh themſelves; French, Spaniards, Portugueſe, Germans, Swedes, Danes, Ruſſians, Italians, and Dutch, all nations of Europe, Aſia, Africa, and America, all ſhapes, colours, and languages, religions, and forms of government. Nay, there was no interdict againſt Satan and his ſubjects: They might ſubſcribe, and their leaders be directors of the Company. None but the Engliſh were denied their native and conſtitutional rights, in order to erect a tyranny, and convert the liberties and the privileges, the taxes, fleets, and armies of the nation, to the aggrandizing the power of Directors, and the enriching the ſubjects of foreign nations.

And here it is to be remarked, that theſe grants, by charter, are expreſly ſaid, in the charter itſelf, "to be in purſuance of the powers and clauſes, for this purpoſe contained in the act of parliament," and not by prerogative. Hence it appears, that the clauſes in the charter, not ſpecified in the act, are thoſe which were granted in conſequence of that ſignal clauſe of the ſtatute, which empowered his Majeſty to grant ſuch rules, qualifications, and appointments as he ſhould think reaſonable.

Among

Among theſe rules, qualifications, and appointments, it was ordained, that the Company ſhould export at leaſt one tenth of their cargoes of the product of England: and I am told they have underſtood theſe words in the inverted ſenſe, of at moſt one tenth of the product of England. That a Chaplain appointed by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſhould be ſent on board of every ſhip of five hundred tuns; but they purpoſely ſend no ſhips of that burden; and thus they evade the obligation of the charter, and rob the Archbiſhop and the clergy of their intended rights. For thoſe good Chriſtian Directors, who were formerly empowered by charter to deſtroy, burn, and put to death all Infidels who ſhould preſume to oppoſe them in their trade, are perſuaded that a Chaplain might naturally diſcourage ſuch directorial Chriſtianity; and thereby, interfering in their ſyſtem of religion, prevent the Company from acquiring theſe immenſe riches which they now have, and which they never could have poſſeſſed, if their governors and officers, their ſoldiers and ſailors, in Aſia, had liſtened to a Chriſtian Prieſt, inculcating acts of mercy, juſtice, and human kindneſs, by his preaching. Beſides, if the ſaid Chaplains ſhould convert the Infidels to Chriſtianity, they would defeat the moſt beneficial branch of the Eaſt India Trade, that of plundering and putting thoſe Infidels to death, who might probably be induced to ſecure their lives and property by becoming converts: and I ſuppoſe the Company ſend no Chaplains for the ſame reaſon that the Mexican Spaniards petitioned the Pope their Sovereign, that the Prieſt in Mexico might be commanded to make no more converts amongſt the Indians: for if they went on in the preſent deſtructive manner, in making Chriſtians, trade would be utterly undone; and there would be no natives left unconverted, to work the mines of ſilver. Lacks and crowes of rupees, ſacks of diamonds, Indians tortured to diſcloſe their

trea-

treaſure; cities, towns, and villages ranſacked and deſtroyed; jaghires and provinces purloined; Nabobs dethroned, and murdered, have formed the delights, and conſtituted the religion of Directors and their ſervants, on the plains of Aſia, in times within this century.

The next clauſe comes under the article of qualifications, as I conceive it, "They are to maintain a Chaplain and ſchoolmaſter in all their factories; and all theſe chaplains are obliged to learn Portugueſe in one year after their arrival."

And this grant of intellectual qualification, of learning a language in one year, was a very gracious act of his Majeſty to the Chaplains; and it was very good in the Commons to enable the King to beſtow the ſaid intellectual qualification; for without this legiſlative and royal grant, I much queſtion whether theſe chaplains could have accompliſhed the learning Portugueſe in a twelvemonth; and many people to this day believe, the Commons granted what they had not to give, and that neither the King nor the Chaplains received any aſſiſtance from that part of the act.

One of the rules is, that they are not to trade for more than their capital; and another that they are not to owe more than that ſum on their bonds. How far they have obſerved or diſregarded theſe rules, I know not; but this I know, there are many perſons who inſiſt that they have violated both. If this be true, on a parliamentary enquiry will it not appear that they have broken their charter? Beſides theſe rules and qualifications there was an appointment that every Director ſhould take the following oath: "I do faithfully promiſe that in the office of a Director of the "Eaſt India Company, I will be indifferent and equal "to all manner of perſons, and will give my beſt advice and aſſiſtance for the ſupport and good government of the ſaid Company; and in the ſaid "office of a Director will faithfuly and honeſtly de-

"mean

" mean myſelf according to the beſt of my ſkill and " underſtanding."

Such being the ſacred injunction of their oaths, which obliges them to be honeſt and faithful to their truſt, indifferent and equal to all men, I am perſuaded that it appeared on Wedneſday laſt, that the rumours which are daily propagated, that the Directors had ſecreted from the Proprietors the annual ſum of 1,200,000l. in the annual account made up in laſt June; and that it was done to conceal from government the true ſtate of the Company's affairs, and that they are exerting their utmoſt power to obtain ſuch ſubſequent Directors as they ſhall nominate: ſplitting ſtock, dividing roguery, extending corruption, menacing, cajoling, and purchaſing the Proprietors to vote as theſe Directors ſhall dictate, is an arrogant falſehood and atrocious calumny, invented and divulged by their enemies, in order to impute the moſt heinous tranſgreſſions to theſe honeſt men. Can it be poſſible, that men of property can triſle with the ſacredneſs of an oath? Will they forfeit their charter by ſuch violation? Or can they ſhew their faces to the ſun after ſuch opprobrious actions? And yet I have heard theſe calumnies aſſerted to be true, by men whom I have found to be ſtrictly ſpeakers of the truth on all other occaſions. But for a full enquiry into this matter, we muſt wait the reſolutions of the Houſe of Commons, and from them their conduct may be juſtified or condemned.

Beſides the preceding grants, the King thought it reaſonable to grant that the Company ſhould have " the rule and government of their forts, factories, " and plantations; to appoint what Governors they " pleaſed, and to remove them at their will and " pleaſure; to raiſe, train, and muſter ſuch military " forces, as ſhall or may be neceſſary for the defence " of the ſaid forts, &c." But he ſtill judiciouſly reſerved " to himſelf, his heirs and ſucceſſors, the Sovereign

" vereign right, power and dominion over all the ſaid " forts, &c. he granted them the power to erect " Courts where the Company ſhould think fit, and " appoint ſuch judges as they ſhall nominate, to hear " and determine all cauſes of forfeitures and ſeizures " of ſhips, goods, &c. of merchants trading con- " trary to the intent of the ſaid Act, together with all " cauſes mercantile, maritime, buying and ſelling; " all policies of inſurance, all bills, bonds, and pro- " miſes for payment of money contracts, charter par- " ties, &c. all treſpaſſes, injuries, and wrongs done " at ſea, within the limits aforeſaid, to be determined " according to equity, and according to the laws and " rules of merchants, upon examination and proof, " by ſuch rules or methods of proceeding as we our- " ſelves, heirs, &c. ſhall from time to time direct " and appoint, under our Great or Privy Seal, and " in the mean time, the Judges are to proceed according " to their beſt judgment and diſcretion, whether it be in " a ſummary way, or otherwiſe. And this ſummary " way is ſuch whereby a man may be convicted of " offences, without any formal proceſs or jury, at the " diſcretion of the Judge or Judges."

In this manner, as the power of making laws had been given by the Commons to the Company, the power of executing them was granted alſo by the King; and theſe two powers ſo judiciouſly ſeparated in the conſtitution of England, in order to preſerve life, limb, freedom, and proſperity to the ſubjects were now united, in the Company, to anſwer very different purpoſes: for as theſe Judges intirely depended on the will of the Company for their continuance in office, and on that continuance their enrichment or their ruin, their ſituation was a perpetual temptation for them to ſacrifice integrity to intereſt, and to prefer the mandates of the Company beyond thoſe of truth and juſtice. What equity then can be expected from men, who without the formal proceſs of law, may convict men of offences; and what the Company may diſlike will be certainly an offence, whether their pride, reſentment, or avarice, be awakened by a criminal or an honeſt conduct in thoſe who, under the denomination of ſervants, are the ſlaves of their oligarchic tyranny? Will not ſuch Judges be ſufficiently diſcrete to give their judgments according to their own and the Company's intereſts, ſo intimately united?

And laſtly, to theſe clauſes were added alſo, that "All Admirals, Generals, Commanders, and other "Officers, ſhould be aiding and aſſiſting to the Com- "pany, upon requeſt made." And thus the fleets and armies of England, raiſed and maintained by the money levied on the nation, were by royal charter deſtined to the ſervice and direction of an oligarchy of Twenty-four Directors, whom the two Houſes and the King had erected into thoſe powers which are included both in the legiſlative and the executive departments of the conſtitution: and it is remarkable that this charter was ſigned by Thomas Tenniſon, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, with the reſt of the Juſtices and keepers of the kingdom; who manifeſted no reluctance at the putting of their hands to this patent, by which the rights, liberties, and privileges of the nation were conveyed to an unconſtitutional Company, who had no right to receive and exerciſe them.

Such were the rules, qualifications, and appointments which the King, the Juſtices, and Keepers of the Kingdom thought fit to grant to the Eaſt-India Company; all which have been exerciſed, together with all thoſe alſo which were previouſly granted and confirmed by former charters: but as the powers to be granted by the King, were to be ſuch as are reaſonable for his Majeſty to grant, as well as ſuch as he might think reaſonable, why were the repreſentatives of the people ſo egregiouſly inadvertant to their duty, as not to examine his Majesty's reason by their own? and attempt the repeal of that law, after they had seen that powers so unreasonable had been granted by the charter? And why did they permit the New Company to exercise those still more despotic and enslaving powers, which never had been granted them, and which were carried into execution because they were constantly perpetrated by the old Asiatic tyranny, from whom they ought to have been taken? Is it possible to conceive, that the Commons of England could be so devoid of common sense as to imagine that such grants were reasonable? or were the majority of that House, at that time, purchased by corrupt influence, as they had been heretofore, or were they dead to all sensation of this nation's injuries, and inexertive of their duty, on so signal and so interesting an occasion?

Could they conceive it reasonable, that bye-laws should be made by men ambitious of power, and thirsting after wealth, whose interest it was to form such laws as were subservient to their arbitrary and avaritious purposes? Were highwaymen endued with this power, they would make laws to hang none but those who were not robbers: and men let loose from legal controul are much the same, whatever be the difference of their titles, or the exaltation of their offices. From these legislative institutes of the oligarchy there was no appeal to the laws of England; or an appeal only to that very law which had given them this privilege of making bye-laws: the only statute then existing relative to this affair, and therefore this power of appeal was at best but illusive.

Could they think it reasonable that the judges of offenders against the Company's bye-laws, should be nominated by those Directors against whom the offences must be committed? That those magistrates, their welfare and their destruction should depend on the arbitrary disposal of that Company. In such caſes, the knowledge of mankind evinces, that the weakneſs of human virtue, actuated by the luſt of riches, goes pre-determined to the trial, and the judge, in general, places himſelf on the ſeat of juſtice, an enemy to the man whom it is his duty to try with equity and impartiality.

Could they think it reaſonable, that fleets and armies, generals, admirals, officers, and common men, ſhould be raiſed and ſuſtained by the public money, and waſte their blood in ſupport of the private ſervice and enrichment of an Aſiatic tyranny on their fellow ſubjects? Why then have they ſo long and ſo ſhamefully deferred the day of abrogating this act? or rather, O ſhameful ſacrifice of their country's cauſe, why have they ſince that time ſtrengthened it with ſubſequent acts, communicating yet farther deſpotiſm to that Company.

Could they think it reaſonable to diveſt themſelves of their inquiſitorial power, and the means of repealing that law? Indignant act! yet this they perpetrated. The King indeed had ſtill ſome power over the ordinances imparted by his charter, but the Commons could effect nothing without his Majeſty's conſent. And as his Miniſters had been formerly bought by 100,000 l. was it to be imagined they would have reſiſted the artillery of double that ſum, when the Commons had ſo kindly ſecured them from examination and puniſhment, for whatever enormities they might commit on that occaſion? Was there an individual among them, who would not have thought it reaſonable, that the King ſhould think it reaſonable to ſacrifice his ſubjects and their country, to the intereſt of the Aſiatic tyrants, when that ſacrifice was to fill the coffers of the Miniſtry? Negatives he gave, and thereby evinced that he was capable of being ſeduced by his Miniſters.

In this manner I have fairly ſtated the nature and the tendency of that ſingular and unprecedented ſtatute, ſtatute, by which the Commons reſigned the rights, liberties, privileges, and properties of their conſtituents, into the hands of King William and the Aſiatic Oligarchy: and ſhould it be alledged, that in this action I have been animated with warmth and reſentment againſt thoſe repreſentatives of this people, I own the juſtice of the charge. For who can patiently behold his country to be ſacrificed by fools and profligates? He that abhors not the abandoned, loves not the virtuous? Perdition catch the ſouls of all ſuch betrayers of their truſt, and traitors to the conſtitution and their country! But the day of judgment is at hand; and may the doom of thoſe Directors whom they unconſtitutionally erected into tyrants be righteouſly pronounced, and let all the people ſay, Amen.

NUMBER XIII.

NOtwithſtanding the unbounded power of granting which had been transferred by the Commons to King William, this juſtice is due to his conduct and his memory, that his preſent grants were by no means equal to thoſe which had been given by preceding Sovereigns, confirmed and extended by himſelf in that former charter, which had been ſo iniquitouſly obtained through the corruption of his Miniſters, in the years 1693 and 1694.

For, by this parliamentary charter, the Company were not empowered to make war and peace, nor to deſtroy, as Infidels, thoſe Princes and their ſubjects, who, according to the law of nature and of nations, are warranted in the oppoſing all invading aliens who may may preſume to trade in their dominions, without the licence of the reſpective ſovereigns. He did not grant them the lands which they may conquer or obtain by treaty; nor the exerciſe of military law; nor to bring as priſoners in chains to England, thoſe fellow-ſubjects whom they may pleaſe to deem infractors of their deſpotic bye-laws; he did not grant them the liberty of coinage, nor the right of ſending embaſſadors in their own, but in his Majeſty's name alone. Theſe are ſignal and illuſtrious inſtances of his great care and preſervation of the rights of Engliſhmen, notwithſtanding too many had been certainly ſubverted by this very charter. And few Kings, conſidering the exceſſive grants which had been laviſhed by their predeceſſors, and the unlimited exerciſe of them imparted to himſelf by parliament, would have acted with equal reſerve, circumſpection, and tenderneſs for his people, to ſecrete, to palliate, or to augment, the errors and miſdeeds. To depreciate, conceal, magnify, or miſrepreſent the excellencies and good actions of Princes, are flagitious in any man, more particularly in all who preſume to delineate hiſtoric facts, to aſſign their motives and effects, and to deliver them to the public.

The Eaſt India Company at that time were not entitled to the exerciſe of any powers, but thoſe which were ſpecifically granted by the ſtatute and the charter; and every extenſion of thoſe powers, beyond thoſe expreſs conceſſions, were a breach of their charter, an infraction of the law of nations, and every violence, by rapine and death, committed on the ſubjects of the Aſiatic ſtates, were abſolutely acts of piracy and murder, for which, by the laws of England, they were liable to be puniſhed. For theſe acts, inſtead of receiving further grants of favour, had they committed the like rapine and ſlaughter in the realms of Europe, they would have been juſtly rewarded rewarded with halters; and it is a ſcandal they have not received it in England.

I ſhall now proceed to enquire into the laws and charters which have been made and granted ſince the preceding reign; and it will then be diſcerned whether by theſe ſubſequent exertions of parliamentary and regal power, the Eaſt India Company are entitled to the exerciſe of thoſe arbitrary acts, which they have carried into execution, ſince the date of the preceding charter.

William being dead, the New Company being thus erected, and the Old remaining, endleſs were the animoſities, and the traverſing each other's intereſt, which were exerted on both ſides. At length, wearied with worrying each other, and with the diſadvantages which it produced, they thought of compromiſing their diſputes and differences; and as the nation was again involved in an expenſive war, and adminiſtration had adopted the method, firſt commenced in the preceding reign, of borrowing vaſt ſums for national exigencies, and mortgaging the properties and labour of the ſubjects and their poſterity to pay the intereſt, it was thought expedient to unite both Companies into one. And to this intent they propoſed to lend one million two hundred thouſand pounds to the government, at the rate of five per cent. This being accepted in the ſixth of Queen Anne, a covenant by indenture tripartite was entered into between the Queen and the two Companies, in order to expedite the union of the two parties; and in conſequence of this indenture, an act was paſſed which eſtabliſhed that union.

By this ſtatute it was enacted, "That the Company "ſhall enjoy all benefit of trade, profits, and ad- "vantages whatſoever, in reſpect of their being given "or granted, or intended to be given or granted unto "them by the ſaid act and charter already deſcribed, "or by the ſaid indenture tripartite," already mentioned tioned. And by this act of proviſo, the clauſe of redemption was iniquitouſly extended; for, inſtead of being redeemable on three years notice at any time, the time was extended twenty years before that notice could be given; and thus the Lord Godolphin, to whom, by the act, the arrangement of theſe affairs was committed, like a perfidious truſtee, protracted the only clauſe in that law and charter, which never ought to have been altered. And had the Company, indulged with that duration, poſſeſſed, at that time, the revenues and profits which, by the Court on the 23d of December, it is incontrovertibly proved they now enjoy, the King, if any ſuch perſon could then have exiſted, would have been the machine of twenty-four Directors; both Houſes of Parliament had been exterminated; the nation enſlaved; and all rule, authority, dominion, and power, in the hands of that oligarchy of deſpots; wherefore, it becomes the vigilance and the duty of the Commons to prevent ſuch tyranny, now thoſe means are in the hands of the Directors.

By the indenture tripartite it was agreed between the Queen and the two Companies, "That no bye-"laws, orders, ordinances, or conſtitutions, ſhould "be made repugnant to the laws of England; and "they expreſly agreed to the obſervance of ſuch par-"ticulars as were granted in King William's charter, "and in the law which enabled him to grant it; and "to this they were bound, and were allowed no other, "Salt-petre excepted." In this manner the former grants, and thoſe by Parliament, were again confirmed, and all others were diſallowed and excepted to, not only by the Queen, but by the two Companies; and thus, by the covenant under their hands and ſeals, by their own act and deed, the Company bound themſelves to obſerve, and not to extend or violate the powers already granted, as it has been related in the preceding papers. Such were the parliamentary liamentary and regal acts in the reign of Queen Anne; by which all the enormities of the former were confirmed, and the conditions rendered more oppreſſive by the protracting of the day of redemption; and thus what the old Scottiſh Colonel ſaid to King James, of both his daughters, was, by this conduct, verified in one of them, and the nation ſtill remained precluded from her juſt rights of freedom and commercial privilege.

The Eaſt India Company, notwithſtanding all theſe unconſtitutional acts and grants, were nevertheleſs ſtill unſatisfied. They therefore, in the fifth of King George the Firſt, ſolicited and obtained another act, which included, among others, the ſubſequent clauſes: "That if any ſubject ſhall ſail, or go to any of the "parts interdicted in the charter, where any trade, "traffic, or merchandiſe is, or may be uſed or had, "contrary to the laws in being, or the tenor of this "act, every perſon ſo offending ſhall be liable to the "puniſhment inflicted by law for ſuch offence. And "it ſhall be lawful for the ſaid Company to arreſt "and ſeize ſuch perſons, being ſubjects of the Crown "of Great Britain, at any place where they ſhall be "found within the limits of theſe realms preſcribed "by charter, and to ſend them to England, there to "anſwer for their offences, according to due courſe "of law."

In this manner did this inſolent and inſidious Houſe of Commons, the ſervants of the people, not only preclude their conſtituents from trading in one half of the globe at leaſt, but from breathing the air in thoſe regions, though the voyages were undertaken for inſtruction or amuſement; and this violence they committed, notwithſtanding that the great charter of Liberties, which laid the firſt foundation of their exiſtence on the baſis of the feudal ſyſtem, had, by expreſs compact, ſtipulated between the King and the people, and, in conformity to the conſtitution, indiſcriminately fixed the right of trading to all parts of the earth in all the ſubjects of England.

And this extravagance and violation was yet farther aggravated by the arrogant uſurpation of ſovereignty over all the Princes, Potentates, and States in this immenſe ſpace of the globe, in defiance of the laws of nature and of nations, by five hundred and fifty-eight ſubjects of this realm, and ſervants of the community. For, what right had they to diſpenſe with and ſuſpend the rights of ſovereign Princes? and with that protection which they may pleaſe to afford to the ſubjects of England. But there is nothing ſo preſumptuous and tyrannic as a Houſe of Commons, hallowed by the voice of corruption in a Prime Miniſter, or incenſed by the ſeditious flame of an oppoſition; and this evinced by innumerable inſtances in the annals of this realm.

But this was not the ſole inſolence and arbitrarineſs of this act; having dared to preclude a thouſand ſovereigns and ſtates, as well as the people of England, from their rights, in the antecedent inſtance; they ordain alſo, "That every perſon who ſhall procure, "ſolicit, obtain, or act, under any commiſſion, au- "thority, or paſs, from any foreign Prince, State, or "Potentate, to ſell or trade in, or to the Eaſt Indies, "or other places interdicted, ſhall forfeit 500 l. one "moiety to the informer, and the other to the "Crown."

In this unconſtitutional and unjuſtifiable manner the people of England, after having been ſubjected to be ſeduced and kidnapped for the military ſervice of the Aſiatic oligarchy, taxed to pay the expences of their embaſſies and expeditions, excluded from their privileges of trade, and even breathing in the ſouthern parts of Aſia, Africa, and America, were inhumanly reſcinded from ſeeking in other realms the advantages which were unjuſtly denied them in their their native land, by men elected to represent and serve the nation in Parliament.

Notwithstanding this oppressive act, Englishmen disdained to yield their rights and liberties to such unwarrantable ordinances; and sought in alien states, more hospitable, those benefits from which they were prohibited in their native country. To prevent this also, it was enacted in the ninth of the same reign, "That if any subject of his Majesty should contribute to, or encourage the establishing or carrying on a foreign Company, trading from any of the Austrian Netherlands to or from the East Indies, or shall be interested in any share of the stock or actions of any such Company, or shall make any payments in money, or by bill of exchange, or otherwise, towards promoting or improving such Company, or the trade thereof, or shall subscribe to the establishing any other foreign Company for trading to the East Indies, or be concerned in any stock therein, the persons so offending shall forfeit their interest or share in the stocks of any such Company, with triple the value thereof, one third to the Crown, and two to the East India Company, if they inform, or sue for the same."

Such was the act by which the honourable East India Company, as they stile themselves in their advertisements for recruits, was erected into a Company of Informers, with premiums for the encouraging them to that laudable employment; and the merchants of England were precluded by their own representatives and sovereign, from receiving the like advantages in foreign states, which foreigners, by law, received in this. An act so destitute of common sense, subversive of sound polity, and repugnant to nationnl advantage, as can hardly find an equal in the Statutes at Large; and certainly these are more than large enough for all good purposes.

It ought to have been the indiſpenſable duty of every part of the legiſlature, to have inſiſted that Engliſhmen ſhould be permitted to ſubſcribe in all the Eaſt India Companies of Europe, in return for thoſe indulgencies, which, in England, had been ſo injudicouſly granted to all nations upon earth; in order, by that reciprocal liberty, to have eſtabliſhed a method of that money being returned to this nation by the payments of the dividends of thoſe Companies, which had been previouſly remitted to them by dividends of India ſtock in England.

Who can refrain from execrating the memory of ſuch miſcreant Beings? Was it ignorance or corruption that prevailed to accompliſh this perfidious purpoſe? In either caſe, what can be the fate of a nation thus diabolically repreſented?

NUMBER XIV.

Jan. 3, 1769.

THE antecedent injunctions, cruel and deteſtable as they muſt appear to the eyes of all men who feel for right and liberty betrayed and ruined, were rendered yet more oppreſſive by the violation of all the laws of nature, and of the conſtitution, reſpecting the penal ſtatutes of this realm: 'The Attorney-General was impowered, of his own accord, or at 'the relation of, and for the Eaſt India Company, 'to file a bill of complaint in the Court of Chancery, or the Exchequer, againſt any perſon who 'ſhall have ſubſcribed, contributed in, or promoted, 'or any ways become intereſted in the eſtabliſhing 'any ſuch foreign Company, or the ſtock or trade 'thereof, for the diſcovery of his offence, inſiſting 'only on the ſingle value; and thereupon ſuch per-

'ſon

'ſon ſhall anſwer to the bill, and not plead or demur
'to the diſcovery thereby ſought. And in caſe the 'ſingle value ſhall be directed to be paid, one third
'ſhall go to his Majeſty, and two to the Company;
'and if any ſubject ſhall have accepted any truſt, or 'know of any intereſt, ſhare, or concern, which any 'of his Majeſty's ſubjects ſhall have, or be entitled 'to, in any ſuch foreign Company, and ſhall not,
'within ſix months after accepting that truſt, or the
'coming to the knowledge of ſuch truſt, truly diſ'cover the ſame in writing to the ſaid Company, or 'their Court of Directors, he ſhall forfeit treble the 'value of that intereſt, ſhare, &c. ſo accepted in 'truſt, or ſo known and not diſcovered, one half to 'the Crown, the other to the perſon who ſhall ſue for 'it; or ſuch offender ſhall, at the diſcretion of the 'Court, ſuffer one year's impriſonment; and all per-
'ſons that within the time above limited ſhall volun'tarily come to the Court of Directors, and make
'a true diſcovery in writing of the intereſt, ſhare,
'or concern of any ſubjects in the ſtock of any ſuch
'foreign company, ſhall have one half part clear of
'the forfeitures ariſing by the acts.'

In this manner the malignancy of lawyers was incited to aid and aſſiſt the avarice of the Company of Eaſt India Informers; the firſt to proſecute on his own mere motion, or on a ſingle relation from the Company, of any act forbidden by this law, and both were let looſe againſt any men whom either of them might chuſe to proſecute through reſentment for any deed whatever it might be: for in that accuſation the true motive might eaſily be concealed.

The innocent were doomed to the expence of anſwering the bill, equally with the guilty, and the latter were put to the torture between two violences, either to accuſe themſelves, ſo contrary to the laws of nature, and of the conſtitution, in all penal ſtatutes; or to incur the heinous ſin of perjury, in order to preſerve ſerve themſelves from the preceding penalties; men were tempted to delude their friends and acquaintance to ſubſcribe, to place the ſubſcription in their truſt, and then to inform, and diſcover that truſt, in order to ſhare in the reſpective forfeitures. All the foundations of mutual confidence in man were ſapped and undermined, and thoſe who would not betray their truſt, were doomed to the payment of a treble ſum, or to impriſonment.

The penalty alſo for travelling only, or being found in any part of the interdicted realms, was encreaſed; all ſuch perſons were now declared 'guilty of a high 'crime and miſdemeanour, to be proſecuted in any 'court of Weſtminſter, liable to corporal puniſhment 'or impriſonment, or ſuch fine as the Court ſhall 'think fit; to be ſeized and brought to England; 'and any Juſtice of the Peace might commit them 'to the next county gaol, till ſufficient ſecurity ſhould 'be given by natural born ſubjects, or denizens, to 'appear in that Court, where ſuch proſecution ſhall 'be commenced, and not to depart out of that 'Court, nor the kingdom, without leave of the ſaid 'Court.'

Such were the ſignal acts of legiſlature paſſed in the reign of George the Firſt; by which it is evinced that the repreſentatives of the people gradually become the more conſpicuous violators of their charge, and more flagrantly ſacrificed their conſtituents rights and privileges as the reigns ſucceeded from the paſſing the firſt act in favour of Aſiatic Maſters, in the reign of King William. Magna Charta, and the Bill of Rights, were totally diſregarded, and that egregious folly then prevailed, which hath ſince ſo enormouſly encreaſed, that the laws paſſed by the Commons, and the other legiſlative bodies, make the conſtitution of England; whereas the Conſtitution did, in fact, make the Commons, and ought to be ſacredly obſerved in every legiſlative act of this Conſtitution. The Great Charter of Right and Liberty, ſix-and-thirty times confirmed, is at once the foundation and the bounds, which cannot be violated by acts of parliament, without effectually undermining the very baſis of parliaments.

Theſe ſtatutes, however replete with conceſſions of arbitrary power, were ſtill inadequate by the purſuits of that Aſiatic Oligarchy; they were inſatiable with the ſweets of deſpotiſm, whilſt any thing remained ungranted which could either impart freſh powers, or corroborate thoſe they already poſſeſſed. Urged by this rapacious incentive they applied to the Throne for another charter, in the thirteenth of that reign. Their petition was founded on 'the want of a proper and 'competent power and authority for the more ſpeedy 'and effectual adminiſtering of juſtice in civil cauſes, 'and for the trying and puniſhing of capital and 'other criminal offences.' What were their ideas of competent power!

Not content with ſeizing and impriſoning thoſe fellow-ſubjects who might preſume to breathe the air, or behold the ſun, in India, with inflicting bodily pains and penalties on all who might dare to exerciſe their native rights, privileges, and liberty, nor with all that egregious exceſs of power which had been already granted; they ſtill remained inſatiable, whilſt the lives of their fellow-ſubjects were unſubmitted to their abominable tribunals and luſt of dominion: for this they petitioned, and obtained it.

In conſequence of this petition, the following powers which are ſtiled reaſonable in the charter, were granted to that Company; bodies politic and corporate were eſtabliſhed at the ſeveral factories, 'conſiſting of a 'Mayor and nine Aldermen; ſeven of theſe were to 'be the natural born ſubjects of the Crown, and two 'might be of any other nation upon earth in amity 'with Great Britain, together with a Sheriff. The 'firſt ſet was nominated by the charter, the Mayor 'and Sheriff were to be annually elected from among 'the

'the Aldermen: theſe were for life, with power of 'chuſing from among the inhabitants of the factories, 'others, who ſhould ſucceed, on the demiſe of any 'of that body.' But this permanency of poſt was oddly circumſtanced. 'Notwithſtanding their being 'appointed for life, they were amoveable by the Go-'vernor and Council, with the liberty of appeal, in-'deed, to King and Council, after having firſt given 'ſecurity to pay the coſts, if the ſentences were af-'firmed.'

In this manner thoſe officers, who were appointed for life, were in fact at the mercy and diſmiſſion of the ſeveral Councils, whenever the latter ſhould think it adviſeable to remove them, and the liberty of appeal was perfectly illuſive; for ſuppoſing the ſentence to be reverſed by the King and Council, theſe magiſtrates could never return to their corporations without permiſſion from the Company. They were, by law, interdicted not only from trading, but even breathing in that country, without licence from the Company, and this law could not be ſuperſeded by charter. Who, among men in ſearch of riches, dependent on the will of the Company, would dare to act in favour of right and juſtice, when they were in oppoſition to the intentions and intereſt of the Company? Or who would appeal to the King and Council, at the riſque of paying coſts, when on being reinſtated, they were reſcinded from returning to their reſpective offices and commercial exerciſe, without permiſſion of that Company, whom this appeal from the ſentence of their Councils muſt neceſſarily have offended? Theſe men were, therefore, as abſolutely in the hands of the Eaſt-India Directors, as the love of money, and the dread of being deprived of all farther acquiring it in India, could place them; and to what an enormous degree of ſervile obedience to the arbitrary commands of thoſe who are the maſters of their fortunes mankind will daſtardly ſubmit, is too well evinced by the ſhameful practice of all ranks, and the repeated experience of every hour.

This body corporate were a court to try, hear, and determine all civil ſuits, actions, and pleas, between party and party, within the factories or parts ſubjected to them reſpectively, without either a Jury, or even a Recorder, who had he been a Barriſter at Law, as in the corporations of England, might direct them to legal determinations in their execution of juſtice.

From the decrees of this court, however, there lay an appeal to the Governor, or Preſident and Council, any three of whom, the Governor or Preſident being one, are permitted finally to determine every cauſe in which the value ſued for does not exceed a thouſand pagodas; and from all their deciſions, in cauſes above that ſum, they had the farther appeal to King and Council, upon ſecurity given of paying eight per cent. for the value adjudged, from the time of adjudging, and coſts of ſuit.

Whatever may be the exterior appearance of this right of appeal from magiſtrates and aldermen, to governors and councils, and from thence to King and council, it is evident, that appeals from the governor and council to the King and council muſt very ſeldom happen. He that appealed, would be no longer permitted to reſide in thoſe factories; the gentlemen, his judges, would certainly act as if they were infallible, and ſuffer no rebels to their juſtice to confront them in their places of command. To appeal for right in England was to loſe the power of getting riches in Aſia; the former was only caſual, the latter certain; few appeals, for that reaſon, could come to England; and then they were not appeals to the laws of England, but to the determination of a Prime Miniſter, who, at that time, was not of ſo incorruptible a nature, as to have oppoſed the faſcinating power of gold from the hands of a Director. In fact, by the bye-laws which they had the power of making, by the Judges whom they appointed, who were abſolutely in their hands, and who carried thoſe laws into execution, and by the perſons who loſt their cauſes, being excluded from appealing to the courts in Weſtminſter-hall, the property of every Engliſhman in all the factories was abſolutely in the hands of the governors and council in thoſe places; and thoſe governors and thoſe councils being at the diſpoſal of the Company, every thing poſſeſſed by all thoſe who were not of the council, in all the factories in Aſia, lay at the mercy of four-and-twenty tyrants, and their ſuperior ſervants.

Beſides the preceding court for the trying of civil cauſes, there was yet another erected for the judging thoſe of a criminal kind. 'The governor, or preſi-'dent, and the five ſenior of the council, were em-'powered to hold quarter-ſeſſions, to be a court of 'record, of oyer and terminer and goal delivery, for 'the trying and puniſhing all offences (high treaſon 'excepted) together with a grand and petit jury, as 'in England.' But as the judges, the ſheriff, and both juries were exactly in the ſame predicament with the mayor and aldermen, dependant on the will of the Eaſt-India Company, as the laws by which the offenders were tried, were ſuch as the Company either made or approved, it follows that the lives, as well as the properties of all the ſubjects of Great Britain in the Company's ſervice, were alſo in the hands of the ſaid four-and-twenty tyrants.

Such were the powers for which this modeſt oligarchy ſo humbly petitioned, and which were graciouſly granted. The lives, liberties, and properties of their fellow-ſubjects might now be thought to have been ſufficiently committed to their hands, and their tyranny eſtabliſhed: but they were yet unſatisfied; for ſomething ſtill remained, which would perfectly complete their deſpotiſm; they therefore, with like humility, petitioned, 'to name and appoint all gene-'rals, 'rals, by land and ſea, as many officers, and what 'number of troops and fleets they pleaſed, and to 'remove them all at their pleaſure; to train the in-'habitants to arms, and to exerciſe thoſe forces for 'their eſpecial defence and ſafety, and to lead and 'conduct them to encounter, repulſe, expel, and re-'ſiſt, by force of arms; to kill, ſlay, and deſtroy all 'perſons, who, in a hoſtile manner, may attempt 'and enterprize the deſtruction, invaſion, detriment 'or annoyance, of any ſubjects or perſons dealing 'with the Company or their ſervants, &c. and upon 'juſt cauſes, to invade and deſtroy the enemies of the 'Company; and in time of war, to uſe and exerciſe 'martial law and diſcipline, in ſuch caſes as occaſion 'ſhall neceſſarily require, and may legally be done. 'The governors and councils to make bye-laws, rules, 'and ordinances for the government of the places, '&c. and to impoſe reaſonable pains and penalties; 'but none of theſe bye-laws, &c. were to be carried 'into execution, until they are approved by the 'Company.'

Such was the charter granted by King George the Firſt, by far the moſt enormous ſtride of royal prerogative beyond its legal bounds, which had been taken by any Sovereign ſince the eſtabliſhment of the Eaſt-India Company by act of parliament. The lives, liberties, and properties of all Engliſh ſubjects in Aſia were now ſubjected to the arbitrary inclinations of four-and-twenty tyrants: for what can be more deſpotic in its nature and formation, than the power of making laws, in whatever manner, and with whatever penalties they pleaſed; the appointing ſuch judges who were all but compelled by torture, to determine as this Company ſhould think fit, and to ſubject both the land and naval forces to military laws, which might make thoſe actions criminal, and to be puniſhed with corporal infliction, impriſonment, or death, which, in the common intercourſe of men, and by the laws of England, were ſcarcely cognizable. This acquiſition, therefore, amply completed all that the heart of man could deſire, or his hand could execute.

If the Kings of England poſſeſs this prerogative of transferring to their ſubjects the rights of more than their own ſovereignty, it is ridiculous and untrue to pronounce that Engliſhmen are free, and that their Kings can neither ſuſpend nor diſpenſe with the laws of the realm. Can Princes impart to Corporations the right of impowering their ſervants, in their name, and under their common ſeal, to exerciſe ſuch arbitrary acts over their fellow-ſubjects, as are acknowledged, by the conſtitution and the laws, to be illegal in the King himſelf? Will thoſe gentlemen, who, in the laſt Parliament, diſapproved, in his preſent Majeſty, the conſtitutional and juſt exerciſe of his prerogative, when, by his merciful proclamation prohibiting the exportation of corn, he ſaved his people from famine, approve of that prerogative exerted by his great-grandfather, which granted the powers of life and death, liberty and property, to an oligarchy of their fellow-ſubjects? If it was neceſſary to indemnify by law the Council which adviſed the prohibition of exporting corn, will they ſupport the actions of that Company who preſumed to petition, and who have conducted themſelves in conſequence of ſuch grants, and pronounce it lawful? Every act of hoſtility and rapine committed on the native Aſiatics, in conſequence of this charter, notwithſtanding the grants of Kings, thoſe of ſelf-defence excepted, are by the laws of England acts of piracy; and every man of them ſlain in battle, or of Britiſh ſubjects put to death by military law, are acts of murder. And I am fully perſuaded, that whoever ſhould proſecute in England the perſon who condemned ſuch men to death in Aſia, would find that the ſame ſentence they illegally pronounced on others, in lands remote, would be juſtly given given againſt them in this country; for to the honour of this realm, the Judges of the law remain untainted with any juſt cauſe of culpable imputation, amidſt that corruption which has ſo flagrantly prevailed in the legiſlature of preceding Parliaments. But this indeed is one indication, among others, which Monteſquieu has aſſigned as demonſtratives of liberty loſt in that nation wherever it is found. In the granting this charter, nothing can, with juſtice, be imputed to the Sovereign who then reigned in theſe realms. He aſcended that royal ſeat in an advanced age, a ſtranger to our language, unknowing in the conſtitution, unacquainted with the nature and the legal claims of the Eaſt-India Company, and what was yet more fatal, he implicitly liſtened to the advice of that Miniſter, who was ſo ſignally formed by nature and by habitude to be the deſtroyer of his country.

No man has ever exiſted, who was more audacious and enterprizing to ſubvert the conſtitution and enſlave the people: and this he effected by the moſt deteſtable of all iniquitous methods, by Acts of Parliament. He planned and procured the Riot Act; that Act, by which the Commons, by their own votes, and without the conſent of the people, extended a triennial to a ſeptennial Parliament; the moſt flagrant violence on the conſtitution which has been committed ſince the days of the Long Parliament, in the reign of Charles the Firſt; he obtained the Acts which encreaſed the Standing Army: he eſtabliſhed the Military Law, in the ſtatute againſt Mutiny and Deſertion; and he, in fact, granted this bloody charter to the Eaſt India Company. Innumerable are the tranſactions by which he attempted the ruin of his country; and yet, amidſt this boldneſs and effrontery in ſubjecting his fellow-citizens to ſuch indignities, he was as puſillanimous as a hare in oppoſing her inveterate enemies. To the French he granted as indulgently through fear all which they required for the aggrandizing grandizing themſelves and humbling England, as he inſolently perpetrated whatever he intended againſt the welfare of the nation. He knew that, enveloped in Acts of Parliament, he perfectly ſecured himſelf from every purſuit, on the account of that miſchief which thoſe contained; but he dreaded the conduct of a war by which he muſt lay himſelf open to defeat, and to national enquiry. This conduct he purſued through a long and baneful adminiſtration; and he ſupported himſelf by ſpreading corruption through a profligate majority of ſucceeding Commons. With powers to diſcharge the national debt, he conſumed that money in German ſubſidies and private extravagance, and left the kingdom as much indebted as he found it. At length, by a ſingular exertion of the Houſe of Commons, he was driven from his power; his actions were colluſively examined by a Secret Committee, which by arts and pecuniary influence he rendered ineffectual, and then exclaimed againſt the ingratitude of thoſe who would not ſerve him without being bribed, though he had conſumed his whole life in ſpeech and practice, to reduce all mankind to that ſtate of degeneracy and corruption, as if men would prove faithful to their corruptor, whom he had educated to be faithleſs to their charge and to rob their country. Deteſted by the nation for the innumerable miſchiefs which he effected, he was ennobled by his King, as the reward of merit, and died in his bed, as if he had lived a deſerving ſubject and an upright miniſter.

Such are the faint and evaneſcent outlines of his character; and yet, ſtrange to relate! he was ſucceeded by others whom he had trained to miſchief, of leſs underſtanding, but of equal iniquity; who purſuing his ſteps have reduced the kingdom to her preſent ſtate of impotency, and from which it never can be relieved, but by applying the revenues of Aſiatic lands to national purpoſes, and to which it ſhall be proved the community have an irrefragable right.

NUMBER XV.

Jan. 9, 1768.

GEORGE the Second having aſcended the Throne of Great Britain, the Eaſt India Company, in the third year of his reign, obtained an act in their favour, by means of having paid into the Exchequer two hundred thouſand pounds, for which they were neither to receive intereſt nor re-payment. By this act, among various other indulgencies, which are not neceſſary to be related, the day of redeeming the charter, by repaying the capital, and on three years notice, was protracted to the 25th of March, 1766.

And by another act, in the 17th year of his reign, the Company having agreed to advance 1,000,000 l. for the expence of the ſtate, on an annuity of three per cent. the date of the charter was extended fourteen years, to 1780; at that time it is to ceaſe, repayment being made to the Company of four millions two hundred thouſand pounds, and all arrears; three years being ſtill given for the bringing their effects from India to this kingdom.

By both theſe ſtatutes they were entitled "to have, "hold, and enjoy, all thoſe rights, privileges, &c. "which, by former acts of parliament, or by any "charter founded thereupon had been granted; and "they were ſubject to ſuch reſtrictions and covenants "as are contained in the ſaid acts and letters patent "now in force."

Hence it uncontrovertibly appears, that all pretenſions to the exerciſe of any powers conveyed by charter, antecedent to the firſt act on which this Company was founded in the reign of King William, are abſolutely without the leaſt foundation. The Company had, indeed, entered into expreſs covenant with Queen Ann to that purpoſe, and the legiſlature giſlature did now eſtabliſh it. By theſe means, as that oligarchy received a freſh ſtrength to their enormous powers on one hand, they were reſcinded from every exceſs of them on the other, by being ſubjected to all the reſtrictions and covenants which are mentioned in the ſtatutes and charters already related.

In whatever inſtances therefore this Company ſhall be found to have extended their arbitrary proceedings beyond the limits preſcribed in thoſe acts and charters, and ſuch as have been ſince that time granted, they are to be conſidered as national criminals, and are undoubtedly the juſteſt objects of parliamentary enquiry, and of condign puniſhment; for certainly the inquiſitorial power of a free ſtate can at no time be more righteouſly exerted, than in diſcovering the violations of a ſet of tyrants, who, by methods more eaſily ſuggeſted than preciſely to be deſcribed, have found the means of enſlaving their fellow ſubjects by acts of legiſlature, and of uſurping to themſelves all thoſe powers, which, divided between the Sovereign and the People in the conſtitution of England, make it a free ſtate, and which, in them united, exerts an oligarchy of four-and-twenty tyrants. Abſolute and unlimited as the grants muſt appear, yet inſtances ſhall be adduced of the Company's having extended their powers to acts unwarranted even by theſe iniquitouſly extenſive laws and charters; and when ſuch proofs are brought, the nature, the illegality, and the inſolence of them explained, it will then remain with the ſervants of the people, in parliament, to do juſtice to the nation and themſelves.

The protracting the day of redeeming the charter from the hands of the Company to 1780, is that which chiefly deſerves the public attention in theſe acts of parliament; and it is on this clauſe the Company have chiefly founded their audaciouſneſs and con-contempt of government, both legiſlative and executive; " We have this term (ſay they) by Parliament, and that cannot be taken from us: and to " that we defy them." But, by the leave of theſe Sovereigns, or without their leave, they are abſolutely miſtaken; this power of redemption, on the preceding terms, is as conſtitutionally to be exerted whenever the Parliament ſhall think fit, as if that circumſtance had been ſpecifically expreſſed in the act.

For, could the Parliament grant a power which they cannot abrogate for fourteen years, or any time ſpecified, they poſſeſs only an authority to ruin, and not to ſave the kingdom. In every ſtatute, however definite and expreſs the conditions, rights, privileges, and duration of them are enacted, there is nevertheleſs virtually remaining an authority in the legiſlature to repeal that act at what moment they pleaſe, provided the public welfare requires it. And this, on no other conſideration than that it is the public welfare which demands that repeal; the very exiſtence of ſocial community and eſtabliſhed polity conſiſts in this fundamental principle, that the national welfare ſhall at all times ſuperſede the claims of individuals and of bodies corporate, whenever that end cannot be otherwiſe attained. And certainly, when this end is only propoſed by anticipating the date of redemption, and which continued to the time ſpecified in the act, would ſubvert the ſtate; the denying that right is a poſition too abſurd and iniquitous to be uttered or ſupported, but by men who are faſcinated by the enchantments of power, ſeduced by the charms of bribery and corruption, or animated by revenge and diſmiſſion, to involve their country in every poſſible calamity, rather than to ſee her felicity re-eſtabliſhed, and her powers reſtored by the hands and adminiſtration of others.

If this act be not repealed, it is not through the want of conſtitutional and juſt authority; there muſt be other motives. Let it be imagined that the legiſlative powers had granted to any body corporate, for twenty years, the excluſive right of ſearching for coals within five miles of London, every way round it; and that, for this act, that corporation had paid into the Exchequer two hundred thouſand pounds. Let it be farther ſuppoſed, that coals were found ſo near to this city, and that the ſtrata, and other indications which are well known to miners, evinced, that in working them they muſt neceſſarily undermine the city, and that one half of it would be thereby deſtroyed, within the duration enacted by the parliament. Is there any man ſo mad or ſo wicked to ſay, that the legiſlative power have no right to repeal that act, becauſe they granted it at a time when this effect was unforeſeen? And yet I am perſuaded the twenty-four Directors of ſuch coal mines would have the impudence to diſpute their title with the Parliament, and roar againſt all violation of private property, though it is demonſtrable that ſuch property can never be legally granted, and that no Engliſhman, nor body corporate, can have a private property either in trade or other objects, by grants or ſtatutes, which reſcind the rights, liberties, and privileges of their fellow ſubjects, who, by the conſtitution, are equally entitled to them with ſuch bodies corporate; much leſs can they legally poſſeſs them, when, by ſuch acts, their tyranny muſt inevitably prove the ſubverſion of the ſtate itſelf.

It is the hackneyed and corrupt aſſertion of Directors and their ſlaves, that there is not the leaſt neceſſity of redeeming the charter at preſent; becauſe there cannot poſſibly ariſe any danger to the ſtate, or injury to the ſubjects, from the continuation of it till 1780. This is certainly a moſt notorious fallacy, as it ſhall be proved; and were it as true as it is falſe, the wreſting from their hands the deſpotic powers which they now exerciſe, will be ten thouſand times more than ſufficient reaſon for the putting an end to ſuch tyranny, and the reſtoring right and liberty to the people.

There is not a man of common ſenſe who will deny that a hundred thouſand men in arms, under the command of the four-and-twenty tyrants, could drive the King from the throne, cut off the heads of the Lords, and hang the Commons, if they pleaſed to command it; and if money will as certainly raiſe that force, and effect that purpoſe, as any thing, by the experience of all ages, can be effected, what is the ſuffering ſuch immenſe ſums to fall into the hands of Directors, leſs than raiſing armies, furniſhing them with military diſtinction, and planting daggers in the boſoms of all the loyal and good ſubjects of theſe realms?

That Parliaments have been once corrupted by an Eaſt India Company, has been proved beyond contradiction; that this corruption has been frequently repeated, is believed by all men of the leaſt diſcernment; that it may again exert that fatal faſcination in future Parliaments is a fair deduction; the hopes of England are therefore on the preſent; and certainly the repreſentatives of the people, who are ſo truly ſenſible of the burthens of the preſent taxes, the oppreſſions on trade, the ſufferings of the laborious, honeſt, and indigent, and the impotence to which this nation is reduced by theſe evils, will pay a due attention to the nation, to themſelves, and their poſterity; and not forego the means of alleviating all thoſe diſtreſſes by the revenues of thoſe Aſiatic lands which Engliſhmen have acquired, and the oligarchs preſume to detain.

Let it be ſuppoſed, that any ancient ſtate had granted to a body corporate the excluſive right of importing for twenty years a certain vegetable, which, upon being taſted, created ſuch a deſire of poſſeſſing more of it, that no means hitherto diſcovered, could preclude the application of all poſſible endeavours to acquire it; that the effects of this production were ſuch as would make men ſpeak what the givers of it commanded, and take arms to deſtroy all thoſe who ſhould preſume to oppoſe their luſt of dominion; would the legiſlature of England entruſt to four-and-twenty of the ſubjects, the right of giving ſuch an omnipotent production to whom they pleaſed, and for what purpoſes they might approve? Or had it been inadvertently granted, and not repealed when quantities ſufficient were in the Company's hands to effectuate theſe ends on numbers ſufficient to deſtroy all that is valuable to man, would not ſuch repreſentatives be juſtly deemed the enemies of their country and of human kind?

Gold, by the undeviating experience of all ages, has uniformly had that effect, and ruined every ſtate into which it hath entered with exceſs, in ſingle men or ſmall numbers of the community; in all inſtances it hath erected tyrannies in various ſhapes of monarchy or oligarchy. No law of matter is more certain than this effect of money on the minds and actions of mankind, not that of gravitation even. To ſtand unconcerned and inactive in this ſituation, is as indefenſible as to remain under an immenſe weight, which is held over your heads by enemies, and to believe they will not let it fall, or if they do, that the weight will not deſtroy you. And the underſtanding of that nation is ſhamefully reduced, or their hearts moſt flagrantly corrupted, if ſuch imminent dangers are permitted to remain by the guardians of the people, in the hands of Eaſt India Directors.

The late acquiſition of the Myſone Country, and Balagat Carnatic, will produce an annual revenue of two millions at leaſt. That ſum added to the former conqueſts, make an income of four millions a year; the ſurplus of all expences after the ſupporting the fleets, fleets, armies, and other occaſions of the Company, will certainly not exceed the annual revenue of Great Britain, which is applied to the exigencies of ſtate in every year of peace. The nation, to maintain her fleets, armies, and other national demands, raiſes within this kingdom, by a land-tax 1,500,000 l. by malt 750,000 l. in all 2,250,000 l. If the Company can be ſuppoſed to expend ſo much in their military and other affairs, there ſtill remains one million ſeven hundred and fifty thouſand pounds, to be applied to all the iniquitous purpoſes that ambition can dictate and deſpotiſm acquire; and where is now the virtue and the reſolution to withſtand ſuch powers which at once compel and ſeduce all thoſe againſt whom it is directed? If the revenues of India be permitted to remain in their hands another year, the rights of ſovereignty and the rights of the people cannot be reaſonably valued at the price of one ſhilling, unleſs indeed the multitude, ſtung by their miſeries and ill treatment, ſhould ſeek from Heaven and their own native powers that redreſs which may be denied them, and vindicate their ſovereign and themſelves; but the prevention of bloodſhed, and the reſtoration of right, will be the undoubted care of thoſe whoſe indiſpenſable duty it is to attend to ſuch important ſervices.

I am now come to the moſt ſignal, unconſtitutional, and tyrannic act that ever had an affirmative from the votes of the Houſe of Commons: this paſſed in the twenty-ſecond year of the reign of King George the Second. By this ſtatute, all that barbarous and inhuman power of exerciſing military law, which was granted by bye-charter by King George the Firſt, was now eſtabliſhed by an act of the legiſlature. No other terms that are known by me in any language, muſt be found to expreſs, with due energy, the horrors of this tranſaction, and the execration which is due to thoſe repreſentatives of the people who ſuffered it to paſs; paſs; for that reaſon I leave it to the honeſt ſenſations of all mankind, and may they never be at eaſe till it is abrogated. The ſubjects of a ſovereign to be entruſted with ſuch ſanguinary powers over the lives, limbs, and liberties of their fellow ſubjects, and to delegate that power in their own name to their ſervants, and the Commons of England to ſanctify that power, is ſacrilege by law eſtabliſhed; and nothing leſs than infinite mercy can forgive that crime.

This infamous bill paſſed not unoppoſed by many in the Houſe of Commons. One nobleman, now an honour to the peerage, and who at that time truly repreſented his country, exerted his ſuperior talents againſt that bill in defence of his fellow ſubjects and the rights of human kind. He proved, by argument unanſwerable, that it was both unjuſt, cruel, and unconſtitutional; he predicted the bloody effects which have ſince verified that prediction; he refuted every word which was offered in its favour; but demonſtration had, at that time, no proof. The reſolution of erecting a military government, which then was the object of one man, prevailed over the energy of reaſon and eloquence; for bribery and corruption had blinded the underſtandings, and blunted the ſenſations of a majority of that Houſe. The tyranny of four-and-twenty oligarchs was eſtabliſhed, and the enſlavement of every Briton, who entered into their ſervice, was abſolutely accompliſhed.

If the ſervants of the people in parliament are conſtitutionally inveſted with the powers of erecting twenty-four of their fellow ſubjects into tyrants, and ſubjecting all the reſt to be their ſlaves, this conſtitution is, of all others, the moſt deteſtable, and every thinking man will exchange his viſion of Liberty for that which is denominated Slavery in Turky. In that empire, one man is the ſovereign, and all his ſubjects on the ſame level of equality: even thoſe monarchs have ſuffered death for acts of deſpotiſm; and and at all times the lenity of taxation compenſates for all that we imagine ourſelves to poſſeſs, and do not enjoy. Whatever Vizir, Baſhaw, or other officer dares to invade the rights or violate the property of the ſubjects, the meaneſt Turk has the right of accuſing him to his ſovereign; he will be heard, and the offender puniſhed. None but Miniſters and their ſubordinates dread the Emperor's power; the people are ſecure and happy. In this kingdom ſubjects are erected into tyrants, and the reſt oppreſſed and ſlaves. Life and death, liberty and property, are in the hands of four-and-twenty deſpotes. If Britons yet be men, they will not ſuffer this indignant humiliation. By the Bill of Rights you have the privilege of petitioning Parliament, and you are ſuicides of all that is eſtimable in your ownſelves, and murderers of the rights of men unborn, if you neglect to apply to that juſt reſource. Vindicate the dignity of your King and your own liberties and rights; for know, that in this reign the four-and-twenty oligarchs have received the firſt check to their tyranny, ſince it originally commenced to be; and the people's revenues in Aſia have been applied in ſome degree to their proper purpoſes.

In the firſt year of his Majeſty's reign it was enacted, 'That if any of the ſaid Company's Preſidents or 'councils at their factories, where they are empowered 'to hold Courts of Judicature, ſhall be guilty of 'oppreſſing any of his Majeſty's ſubjects beyond the 'ſeas, within their reſpective juriſdictions or com'mands, or ſhall be guilty of any other crime or 'offence, contrary to the laws of England, ſuch 'oppreſſions, crimes, and offences, may be enquired 'of, heard, and determined in his Majeſty's Court 'of King's Bench by good and lawful men; and 'ſuch puniſhments ſhall be inflicted on ſuch offenders 'as are uſually inflicted for offences of the like nature 'committed in England.'

And

And by another act, 'four hundred thousand 'pounds a year of the Asiatic revenues were applied 'to the service of the state.'

By these acts you have been in part restored to the laws of your country, and your rights have been revived, and some part of your territorial acquisitions have been applied to the national exigencies. This auspicious dawn promises the full restoration of right, liberty, and property; and did the accomplishment of all these depend on your sovereign only, it would be granted with more joy by him, than it can be received by you; for such is the paternal disposition of your present sovereign.

NUMBER XVI.

Jan. 11. 1769.

THE fleets and forces of the King of Great Britain, in conjunction with those of the East India Company, having recovered the town of Calcutta from the hands of Serajah Dowla, the Nabob of Bengal, on the 5th of February 1757; that Nabob being again defeated, was dethroned and assassinated, and Meer Jaffier, on the account of his villanies, was raised to the government of Bengal by the British, as Mr. Dowe, in his late history of Hindostan, truly expresses it. In consequence of this revolution in that province, certain lands were demanded as the fruits of their conquest; and Meer Jaffier, who had betrayed his master, the Nabob, in battle, and had been set up by the Company, being in no situation to deny the English whatever they might ask, ceded those lands to the Company by treaty, which they they had conquered by arms, and which he was unable to withhold.

The Directors having received intelligence of these successes, were conscious that neither by law nor charter, the lands, plunder, and booty taken by their own forces from their enemies in India, could be legally possessed by the Company. They, therefore, pretended "to be doubtful whether such districts of "land and plunder, which might be conquered and "taken by their own forces, upon any occasion, either "by land or sea, did not belong to his Majesty."

Such being the basis on which they ground their application to the King, as it is expressed in their petition, they add, as the motive to having their petition granted, "That the expences of carrying on "their wars in defence of their plantations and trade, "are greater than the Company can bear; and there- "fore these petitioners most humbly pray his Majesty, "that he will be graciously pleased to grant to his pe- "titioners, for their own use, all such plunder, "booty, treasure, &c. which may be taken by any "of his petitioners land or sea-forces from any of his "Majesty's enemies, or from the Indian enemies of "his petitioners. And that his petitioners may hold "and enjoy, subject to his Majesty's right of sove- "reignty in and over the same, all such fortresses, "districts, and territories within the limits of their "trade, as they have acquired, or may hereafter ac- "quire, from any nation, state, or people, by treaty, "grant, or conquest; with power to restore, give "up, and dispose of the same, as they shall from "time to time see occasion; subject, nevertheless, to "his Majesty's disposition and pleasure, as to such "lands as may be acquired by conquest from the sub- "jects of any European power." The hardiness of this petition is perfectly consentaneous with all the preceding conduct of this Company, though infinitely inferior to that which they have obſerved ſince the preſenting to it.

The petition, ſuch as it is, was preſented to his Majeſty, and from him tranſmitted to the Attorney and Solicitor General, for their opinion on the terms which it contained; and the gentlemen who then filled the preceding places, were the preſent Lord High Chancellor of England, and Mr. Charles Yorke.

On the 24th of December 1757, theſe gentlemen, in their report on the petition, delivered their opinions on the petition, reſpecting the charter which might be granted in conſequence of it. What particularly relates to the capture of ſhips and goods, is not to the preſent purpoſe minutely to enquire; it is ſufficient that a grant of them was approved, under ſpecified reſtrictions; and "that this grant ſhould be confined "to captures made in a defenſive war, or during a "ſtate of hoſtility commenced merely for the pro- "tection of their trade and ſettlements: this (they "ſay) is agreeable to the terms and intentions of all the "charters given to the Company, by his Majeſty or his "royal predeceſſors, which empower them to make "war in the Eaſt Indies only, to recompenſe them- "ſelves for loſſes, or to repel invaders."

Hence it appears, that neither by law nor charter, the Company had at that time the leaſt right to pretend to the grant or privilege of declaring an offenſive war; what indulgences they have ſince reſerved, and how far they have obſerved the antecedent reſtriction, will be ſhewn hereafter.

"As to the latter part of the prayer of the peti- "tion, relative to the holding, or retaining fortreſſes "or diſtricts already acquired, or to be acquired by "grant or conqueſt, the Attorney and Solicitor Ge- "neral beg leave to point out ſome diſtinctions upon "it.

" In reſpect to ſuch places as have been, or ſhall " be acquired by treaty or grant from the Mogul, " or any of the Indian Princes or governments, his " Majeſty's Letters Patent are not neceſſary; the " property of the ſoil veſting in the Company, by " the Indian grants, ſubject only to his Majeſty's " right of ſovereignty over ſuch ſettlements, as Eng- " liſh ſettlements, and over the inhabitants, as Eng- " liſh ſubjects, who carry with them his Majeſty's " laws, wherever they form colonies, and receive his " Majeſty's protection, by virtue of his Royal Char- " ters. In reſpect to ſuch places as have been lately " acquired, or ſhall hereafter be acquired, by con- " queſt, the property, as well as the dominion, veſts " in his Majeſty, by virtue of his known prerogative, " and conſequently, the Company can only derive a " right to them through his Majeſty's grant; but " they (the Attorney and Solicitor General) ſubmit " their humble opinion to his Majeſty, that it is not " warranted by precedent, nor agreeable to ſound policy, " nor to the tenor of the charters which have been laid " before them, to make ſuch a general grant, not " only of paſt, but of future contingent conqueſts " made upon any power, European or Indian, to a " trading Company. If at any time the Eaſt India " Company, in the proſecution of their juſt rights, " ſhall chance to acquire a fortreſs or diſtrict, which " may be convenient for carrying on their trade, and " is after ceded to them by treaty, or proper to be " maintained by force, it is time enough to reſort to " his Majeſty for his Royal Grant, whenever the caſe " ariſes.

" At the ſame time the Attorney and Solicitor " General do juſtice to the honourable intentions of " thoſe who preferred this petition to his Majeſty, in " ſaying, that as ſoon as the objections were intimated, " they (the Directors) readily acquieſced, and expreſ-

" ſed themſelves much more anxious for the ſake of " obtaining a clear rule for the direction of their offi- " cers in India; to have their doubts explained, as " to their powers of reſtoring or ſurrendering places " conquered; and to know whether the Company is " enabled, by any of their preſent Charters, to yield " up conqueſts made on the Indian princes or Go- " vernments by treaty, without his Majeſty's licence " in every inſtance, the procuring of which might be " attended with great delay in preſſing exigencies. " In anſwer to this doubt ſo ſtated, the Attorney and " Solicitor General are humbly of opinion that the " Royal Charters granted to the Company having re- " peatedly given them the powers of making peace " as well as war with the Indian Princes or govern- " ments, it is incident to the power of making peace " to be enabled to reſtore conqueſts, or things taken " in war, otherwiſe they would have the power of " making peace, without the means of obtaining it. " But, to remove all poſſible doubts, they think it " will not be improper to explain the powers of " making peace, by a clauſe to be inſerted in the " Letters Patent propoſed, enabling them to make " ceſſion of new conqueſts acquired from any of the " Indian Princes or ſtates, during the late troubles " between the Eaſt India Company and the Nabob " of Bengal, or which ſhall be acquired in time co- " ming.

" This explanation will be agreeable to the plan " of former charters, in which they beg leave to ob- " ſerve to his Majeſty, that the general power of " making war is further explained and followed by " particular deſcriptions of the hoſtilities which the " Company may exerciſe againſt their enemies, but " the power of making peace is not extended by any " ſuch deſcription."

And

And this power of making war was already aſcertained by the ſame gentlemen to be defenſive only, merely for the protection of their trade and ſettlements.

On reviewing this petition of the Company, it is manifeſt that they prayed only for ſuch fortreſſes and diſtricts which had been, or muſt be acquired by grant or treaty, or, by the conqueſt of their own troops and navy, and not by the victories of his Majeſty's forces, in conjunction with thoſe of the Company; and that on this propoſition the report diſtinguiſhes, with the utmoſt juſtice and good ſenſe, that there exiſted a vaſt difference between the grants and treaties made in times of peace, with the Indian Princes, and thoſe treaties which were made conſecutive of war and conqueſt. The lands acquired by the former were veſted in the Company, with the right of ſovereignty in the King; the latter were his Majeſty's property, as well as dominion or ſovereignty, and could become thoſe of the Company by ſubſequent grants alone.

If we conſider the importance and deſire of having this part of the petition to be granted to the Company; the powerful means in the hands of the Directors, to obtain a report conformable to the circumſtances of their petition, the known effects which ſuch ſiniſter motives have evidently produced on ſome members of a former and a late Houſe of Commons; the probability that the Directors would not have neglected a like application and influence on this occaſion, and the general corruption of the age, by precedent eſtabliſhed; this report does the higheſt honour to the underſtanding and integrity of the then Attorney and Solicitor General; for, from a full experience of the practice of thoſe Directors, from the reign of King William to the end of the laſt parliament, it cannot be doubted but that they were either deterred by the eſtabliſhed characters of theſe gentlemen, from attempting to influence their opinions by pecuniary pecuniary perſuaſion; or, that if they did preſume it, that they were rejected with indignation and contempt.

NUMBER XVII.

Jan. 16, 1768.

IN conſequence of the opinion delivered by the Attorney and Solicitor General, as it is tranſcribed into the preceding paper, a warrant was drawn up, approved and ſigned by the then Mr. Pitt, who was Secretary of State, dated the 24th December 1757, directing the Attorney and Solicitor General to draw up a charter, to be granted to the Eaſt India Company in conſequence of their petition, and conformable to the opinion delivered in the report. In relation to thoſe lands which were, or might be acquired from the Indian Princes, by grants or treaties made between theſe Princes and the Company in times of peace, there is nothing ſaid in the charter; "Becauſe "the property of ſuch lands was already veſted in "the Company by the Indian grants, ſubject to the "ſovereignty of the King, on which account his "Majeſty's letters patent were not neceſſary." And with reſpect to the holding and enjoying thoſe lands which were, or might be acquired by treaties or grants after conqueſt, the Directors, who preferred the petition, as ſoon as the preceding objections were intimated by the Attorney and Solicitor General, readily acquieſced in the impropriety of this part of the petition, and expreſſed their anxiety for the obtaining a rule for the direction of their officers in India, as to their powers of reſtoring and ſurrendering places conquered; and to know whether the Company is enabled, by any of their preſent charters, to yield the conqueſts conqueſts made on the Indian Princes, by treaty, without his Majeſty's licence in every inſtance.

Hence it is manifeſt, that though the petition which had been delivered to the King was not withdrawn, and ſtill contained the prayer of holding and enjoying the lands acquired by conqueſts, yet that theſe Directors, who applied for the grant of all lands ſo acquired, had, in fact, given up that part of the petition by acquieſcing with the objections which were intimated by the Attorney and Solicitor General, and deſired only to be aſcertained, whether the Company were enabled by any charter to yield up any lands which were or might be conquered by their own forces, without the King's licence.

That the Company were not at that time enabled to cede, reſtore, or yield up any lands conquered by their troops, is evident, becauſe that power is granted them in this charter, which would have been needleſs had it been antecedently granted; and that they were denied the holding or enjoying them by treaty or conqueſt, is equally clear, becauſe they had it not at that time, and it has never ſince been granted by any charter.

The charter was therefore drawn by the Attorney and Solicitor General, in conſequence of the preceding opinions and circumſtances already related, with this proviſo; "That all wars, hoſtilities, and "expeditions ſhould be begun, carried on, and com- "pleated by the forces, land or naval, raiſed and "paid by the ſaid Company alone." And that in theſe circumſtances, "the ſaid united Company ſhall and "may, by treaty of peace, made or to be made be- "tween them, or any of their officers employed in "their behalf, and any of the Indian Princes or go- "vernments, cede, reſtore, or diſpoſe of any for- "treſſes, diſtricts, or territories acquired by conqueſts "from any of the ſaid Indian Princes or govern- "ments,

" ments, during the late troubles in Bengal, or which " ſhall be acquired in time coming."

Such was the charter granted in conſequence of the Company's petition, and the report of the Attorney and Solicitor General. By this it is manifeſt, that of all lands acquired, or to be acquired, from the Indian ſtates, either by grant or treaty, in times of peace, the ſoil was the property of the Company, and the ſovereignty appertained to the King. But that by treaties, conſecutive of conqueſts, all fortreſſes, diſtricts, and territories, ſo acquired or to be acquired, were both the property, as well as the dominion of his Majeſty; and this even when theſe territories were acquired by forces in the ſole pay of the Eaſt India Company. With reſpect to ſuch diſtricts, either already conquered or to be conquered, in conjunction with the Britiſh forces, the Company did not preſume to petition to have even the privilege of ceding, reſtoring, or diſpoſing of thoſe territories, much leſs to hold and enjoy them. It is evident alſo, that this power of ceding, reſtoring, and diſpoſing of theſe acquiſitions obtained by the conqueſts of their own troops, was granted only, as the report expreſſes it, in order to have the means as well as the power of making peace; and becauſe the diſtance between Great Britain and Bengal was too great to permit the waiting for the tranſmitting to England thoſe intelligences which were neceſſary, and the receiving ſuch inſtructions as were requiſite for the concluſion of hoſtilities with proper expedition. But with regard to the holding and enjoying ſuch lands and fortreſſes that were or might be taken by the land or ſea-forces of the Company, that was abſolutely refuſed: for whatever articles are petitioned for, and not granted in the charter conſecutive of ſuch petition, theſe do actually remain in the ſame ſtate in which they were before the charter was granted. The licence of holding and enjoying the lands, which were or might be acquired quired by conqueſt, even by their own troops, being omitted in that latter patent, that circumſtance is, in fact, not only a refuſal of that part of their petition, but an interdict to the exerciſe of thoſe powers, and the retaining ſuch lands one moment in the hands of the Eaſt India Company, not by the King alone, but by the laws of the land.

That this is incontrovertible muſt appear from the report of the Attorney and Solicitor General, wherein the grants of ſuch lands were expreſly reſerved to be granted by his Majeſty on future petitions, and whenever ſuch caſes ſhall ariſe. Many ſuch caſes have ſince ariſen, and no charters have hitherto been granted, and probably unaſked for.

Hence it is evident, from the nature of the conſtitution, the right of the prerogative, the letter of the laws, the opinion of the Attorney and Solicitor General, the omiſſion of that requeſt in the charter, and the denial thereby expreſſed, the conſciouſneſs of the Directors, that without ſuch licence granted by his Majeſty, expreſly conveying ſuch powers of holding and enjoying the conquered lands, that the Company could have no right, title, or claim to them, even when they were acquired by the conqueſts of their own troops.

Yet ſuch is the pertinacious effrontery of theſe oligarchs; they, nevertheleſs, preſume to with-hold from their lawful ſovereign, not only the property of theſe lands which have been conquered by their forces, but the property alſo of thoſe territories which were conquered in conjunction, and under the command of his Majeſty's land and naval armaments, in defiance of the King, the conſtitution, and the laws. That theſe lands were acquired by conqueſt, is beyond refutation: the Company themſelves declare it in their petition expreſly in theſe words, "Your "petitioners have acquired from their enemies, the "ſaid Nabobs of Bengal, ſome diſtricts of land," &c.

That a trading Company, (governed by four-and-twenty oligarchs, whoſe whole capital in trade is but 5,200,000 l. for a loan of 4,200,000 l. to the government on national ſecurity, and a parliamentary right of borrowing a greater ſum from the people, after confeſſing they have no right to ſuch territories, petitioning to have them granted, acquieſcing in the impropriety of the grant, and being refuſed by that very power to which they applied alſo for the obtaining a charter to that purpoſe) ſhould ſtill preſume to diſpute the property of thoſe lands with that very King from which they prayed to receive them, is an act of effrontery unexampled in the hiſtory of all ages, unleſs in times of open rebellion, when the ſubjects were actually in arms, and had abſolutely thrown off all allegiance to their King, and defied his lawful rule and conſtitutional authority.

Whether the behaviour of the Aſiatic oligarchs be included within the definition of rebellion, I cannot poſitively determine; but as they have at preſent their armies, unconſtitutionally in poſſeſſion of the territorial property of his Majeſty, as they ſtill diſpute his undoubted title to thoſe lands, and claim a right in them inſupportable by law, it is not impoſſible that the ultimate reſource, in ſupport of this audacioufneſs, may be to thoſe very armies. Such being the true ſtate of things, I know of no argument which can evince that this Company is not in actual rebellion.

Hardy, rapacious, illegal, and unpardonable as this oppoſition and behaviour of the Company muſt certainly appear to all honeſt and diſintereſted men, there is yet another circumſtance not leſs extraordinary and criminal; it is, that thoſe repreſentatives of the people, whoſe duty it was in the laſt parliament to reſtore to his Majeſty his undoubted property, and to do juſtice to the nation and themſelves, ſhould have ſo long and ſo ſupinely indulged the inſupportable able and illegal pertinacioufneſs of a trading Company: why did they not wreſt the rights, liberties, properties, and commercial privileges of the people from the fangs of theſe tyrants? Why did they not reſtore to the moſt benignant of Kings his juſt rights and properties in Aſia, that by the immenſe revenue of four millions, which they will produce, he may accompliſh the ardent deſire of relieving his ſubjects from oppreſſion, and of reinſtating his dominions in their antient ſplendor and importance?

NUMBER XVIII.

Jan. 17, 1769.

THAT the dominions and the revenues in India, which are at preſent in the hands of the Eaſt India Company, are the property of the Crown alone, uſurped and illegally withheld, by that Company, from their rightful Sovereign, is, I imagine, effectually proved to the conviction of every individual of common ſenſe: unleſs, indeed, it can be ſhewn, that theſe territories have been granted to that Company by charter, ſubſequent to that which is tranſcribed and referred to in the preceding paper; or that theſe territories have not been acquired in conſequence of victories obtained by the armies, not only of the Aſiatic oligarchs, but of the King of Great Britain. As they ſtill perſiſt in their right of holding and enjoying theſe dominions, let them produce the charters by which they have ſince been granted: but ſuch grants they confeſſedly do not poſſeſs; or let the legiſlature take them from their uſurpation.

That ſome parts of theſe territories were acquired by Conqueſt, the Company acknowledge in their petition.

tition. That theſe lands, and I believe all which they have ſince obtained, were acquired by conqueſt, I make no doubt that I ſhall prove beyond the power of being diſproved. In order to effect this conviction by the moſt full and coercive evidence, I ſhall delineate the wretched ſituation to which the Company were reduced, during the laſt war, in India; the means by which they were extricated and preſerved from perdition; and I ſhall then cite the very words of the treaties made between the Company and the Nabobs in India, after the latter were defeated by the Engliſh forces.

In the year 1755, Commodore James attacked and took Bencote, a port of great conſequence in the dominions of Angria the pirate. This port was kept by the Company, and is ſtill in their hands, under the name of Port Victoria. Will the Company deny that this fortreſs was acquired by conqueſt?

In the year 1756, Admiral Watſon, with five of his Majeſty's ſhips of war, aſſiſted by the land and naval forces of the Company, totally defeated the forces of Angria, burnt his ſhips, took his magazines and treaſure, and ſubdued the port of Geriah, the capital of his dominions. It will not be denied that this alſo was effected by conqueſt; by a conqueſt even, which, had the petition of the Company been granted, as it was not, could not have entitled that Company to take poſſeſſion of thoſe fortreſſes and territories ſubdued by the King's forces: and yet this indiſputable property of his Majeſty is ſtill unlawfully held, by this Company, as if they were the ſole and indiſputable proprietors.

The Engliſh at Calcutta had committed various enormities againſt the ſubjects of the Nabob of Bengal, without any regard paid to the remonſtrances and complaints of the Indians by the preſident of the Engliſh factory; and among others, not leſs atrocious, they had impriſoned a rich merchant, a ſubject of of Serajah Dowla. The Nabob, juſtly reſenting this injuſtice, attacked and took Calcutta; and in revenge for the impriſoned merchant, and other outrages by the Engliſh, he threw all the latter, whom he found in that place, into a priſon called the Black Hole. They conſiſted of one hundred and forty-ſix perſons, of which twenty-three only ſurvived the impriſonment of one night.

In conſequence of this event, preparations were made for the retaking that important place; and in the year 1757, Admiral Watſon, with his Majeſty's fleet under his command, cannonaded the batteries, which the Nabob had erected in defence of Calcutta, with ſuch vigour, that they were immediately ſurrendered on the debarkation of the troops. Capt. Smyth alſo in the Bridgewater, and with other forces, reduced the town of Nugiſley, and in revenge for the impriſonment of the Engliſh at Calcutta, he deſtroyed by fire the whole town and magazines which it contained.

Not long after theſe events, Captain Warwick, with a detachment of ſeamen in his Majeſty's ſervice, joined the land forces commanded by Col. Clive; the Nabob, Serajah Dowla, was attacked and defeated. In conſequence of this victory, a treaty was concluded between the Nabob and the Engliſh. In this it was ſtipulated, "that the villages which were "given to the Company by the King's (or Mogul's) "treaty, but detained by the Subahs (or governors "of them) be allowed to the Company; and that "no impediment or reſtriction be put upon the ze-"mindars [or collectors of the Company's revenues]: "that reſtitution be made the Company of their "factories and ſettlements at Calcutta, Coſſimbuzar, "Dacca, &c. which have been taken from them."

Theſe, and many other articles, not neceſſary to be related, were obtained by this treaty. And then "Admiral Charles Watſon and Col. Clive promiſe,

"in

" in behalf of the Engliſh nation and of the Engliſh " Company, that from henceforth all hoſtilities ſhall " ceaſe in Bengal; and that the Engliſh will always " remain in peace and friendſhip with the Nabob, as " as long as theſe articles are kept in force, and re- " main unviolated."

Will the Company have the face to deny that theſe territories were acquired by conqueſt, when the very treaty, by which they pretend to the property of thoſe lands, expreſly declares, that all hoſtilities ſhall ceaſe, and peace be concluded? And it ſhall be proved in a very little time, that this preſumption of treaty-making in their own name, is equally illegal and unwarranted with their inſolence, in diſputing the property of the conquered lands with their Sovereign. And here it muſt be again remarked, that theſe lands were acquired by the conqueſts of his Majeſty's forces, in conjunction with thoſe of the Company; and therefore not within the terms of the petition, had they been wholly granted. Notwithſtanding theſe unanſwerable truths, the Company have ſtill the hardineſs to retain and to diſpute the property of thoſe territories with their King, to whom they have ſworn allegiance: and what is yet more ignominious, they have hitherto been ſupinely permitted to withhold them from the ſervice of the ſtate.

On March the 22d, Chandanagore, the chief ſettlement of the French in Bengal, was reduced by Admiral Watſon and Col. Clive; and all the artillery and other effects fell into their hands.

Notwithſtanding this treaty ſo ſolemnly concluded in the latter end of the month of February, " It was " ſuſpected that the Nabob had hoſtile deſigns; and " therefore it was reſolved to re-commence the war " againſt him. Meer Jaffier, then one of the Na- " bob's principal officers, promiſed to join with us, " upon condition that the government of Bengal " ſhould be conferred upon him after the defeat of

" Serajah

" Serajah Dowla." These are the words in Mr. Vansittart's Narrative.

Can the history of the universe afford a more ignominious and inhuman act than this breach of treaty, commencing hostilities, entering into engagements with a traitor to dethrone his sovereign, and to give his dominions to that rebellious servant? Yet were all these insidious resolutions undertaken and executed, upon the bare suspicion of Serajah Dowla's having designs to re-commence hostilities. Was this a defensive war entered into according to the terms and restrictions of their charters? Was this war to right and recompence themselves for injuries received, when there was confessedly no injury, nor the least infraction of one article of the treaty pretended even to have been attempted by the Nabob? Is it not an action expressly forbidden by all the laws of God and man?

As the effect of this execrable breach of faith, and covenant stipulated with Meer Jaffier, the traitor, war was undertaken against Serajah Dowla; and by the assistance of some seamen in his Majesty's service, commanded by one of their own officers, together with the forces of the Company, commanded by Col. Clive, and assisted by the treason and treachery of Meer Jaffier, together with the aid of a good mud-wall, a shower of rain which rendered the enemy's artillery unserviceable, an attack, or rather a march to an eminence, made by Captain Fitzpatrick, without opposition, and above all, the cowardice of the Asiatics, the battle of Plassey was won on the 19th of June, not full four months after the conclusion of the preceding treaty. The bloodiness and difficulty of acquiring this conquest is perfectly evinced by the vast number of the Company's troops which were slain in the field of battle, amounting, on the most accurate research, to full twenty men, most of which were Seapoys.

Let

Let no Briton, henceforth, mention the miſeries and inhumanity of their countrymen being confined by Indians in the Black Hole; in which act it is probable there was not the leaſt intention in the Nabob of putting them to death; when ſuch inſidious and inhuman deeds, as thoſe above related, have been perpetrated by the ſanguinary ſervants of the Eaſt India Company, approved and ratified by the four-and-twenty directorial tyrants.

This victory being won, Colonel Clive marched to Muxadavad, and there placed Meer Jaffier on the throne, and ſaluted him Subah, or Nabob, of Bengal, Bahar, and Orixa, as the reward of his treaſon to his Sovereign; and that nothing of that kind might be omitted on that occaſion, that treachery was compleated by the murder of Serajah Dowla in ſecret. All this heinous tranſaction was entered upon and accompliſhed on the mere ſuſpicion of hoſtile deſigns in Serajah Dowla. And yet the heaven-born General had ſolemnly ſubſcribed the following declaration at the concluſion of that treaty which the Company's ſervants had now violated on ſuſpicion only.

" I, Colonel Clive, Commander of the Engliſh " land-forces in Bengal, do ſolemnly declare, in pre- " ſence of God and our Saviour, that there is peace be- " tween the Nabob, Serajah Dowla, and the Engliſh: " they, the Engliſh, will inviolably adhere to the ar- " ticles of the treaty made with the Nabob: that as " long as he ſhall obſerve his agreement, the Engliſh " will always look upon his enemies as their enemies, " and whenever called upon, will grant him all the " aſſiſtance in their power." And yet theſe very Engliſh, without the leaſt pretended cauſe of provocation, concluded an inſidious alliance with a traitor, the worſt of enemies, depoſed his Sovereign and their ally, and placed that rebel on the throne of his murdered maſter.

NUMBER XIX.

Jan. 18, 1769.

AS the natural conſequence of the treaſon and perfidy perpetrated by the preceding tranſactions, a treaty was concluded between the exalted traitor and the heaven-born General, accompanied by the Admiral, Governor Drake, and Mr. Watts. As Mr. Vanſittart has placed the concluſion of this alliance, after the enthroning the new Nabob, I have followed him; but as he has not mentioned the additional article included in this paper, I am perſuaded that theſe were the terms which had been ſtipulated when the ſervants of the Company firſt agreed with Meer Jaffier to aſſiſt his treaſon, and depoſe his maſter and their unoffending ally. The ſubſequent articles form a part of that treaty:

"That the enemies of the Engliſh were the ene"mies of the Nabob, whether they be Indians or "Europeans.

"All the factories and effects belonging to the "French in Bengal were to remain in the poſſeſſion
"of the Engliſh, nor were they ever to be allowed
"any more to ſettle in the three provinces.

"Recompence, in expreſs ſums, was agreed on to "be paid by the Nabob for the plunder of Calcutta;
"and for the charges occaſioned by the maintenance
"of the forces, he bound himſelf to give one crore
"of rupees." Has the government ever received one ſhilling for that part of the expence which was incurred by the King's fleet and forces engaged in this affair? "Within the ditch which ſurrounds the bor"ders of Calcutta, are tracts of land belonging to "ſeveral zemindars (or perſons who hold tracts of " land immediately of the government, on condition " of paying the rents of them). Beſides this, he " granted the Engliſh Company ſix hundred yards " without the ditch.

" All the lands lying ſouth of Calcutta, as far as " Culpee, ſhall be under the zemindary (the lands " held by the tenure of paying the rents) of the Eng- " liſh Company, and all the officers of thoſe parts " ſhall be under their juriſdiction.

" Whenever I, Meer Jaffier, demand the aſſiſtance " of the Engliſh, I will be at the charge of the " maintenance of them.

" As ſoon as I, Meer Jaffier, ſhall be eſtabliſhed " in the government of the three provinces, the " aforeſaid ſums ſhall be faithfully paid."

And then as an additional article, " On condition " that Meer Jaffier ſhall ſolemnly ratify, confirm by " oath, and execute all the above articles, which the " underwritten, on behalf of the honourable Eaſt " India Company, do; declaring on the Holy Goſ- " pels, and before God, that we will aſſiſt Meer " Jaffier with all our forces to obtain the Subahſhip " of the provinces of Bengal, Bahar, and Oriſſa: " and further, that we will aſſiſt him to the utmoſt " againſt all his enemies whatever, as ſoon as he calls " upon us for that end, provided that he, on his " coming to be Nabob, ſhall fulfil the aforeſaid ar- " ticles."

From the latter part of this article, is it not more than probable that this treaty was entered into before the defeat of Serajah Dowla? The day on which it was concluded is not inſerted in the paper from whence I have tranſcribed the preceding paſſage, though it is ſaid to be in the month of June 1757; but whether it was before the battle, or ſo ſoon after it, that the provinces were not then under the dominion of Meer Jaffier, it is ſelf-evident that theſe lands were acquired by by conqueſt; and moſt probably it was ſtipulated before the battle that they ſhould be acquired by conqueſt. This is a truth too coercive to be reſiſted; and in this victory, alſo, I muſt add, that his Majeſty's forces being engaged, the property alſo of theſe lands is the King's, for the reaſons already ſo repeatedly aſſigned.

By this treaty Meer Jaffier was now to be ſupported againſt all his enemies whatever, and the provinces of Bengal, Bahar, and Oriſſa, to be preſerved to him; and thus the ſubſcribers in behalf of the Company, who had aſſiſted Meer Jaffier to dethrone and murder his immediate Sovereign, now entered into an alliance with him to ſupport his rebellion againſt the Mogul, to whom, by the conſtitution of Indoſtan, he was, as Nabob, a ſubject, and could not lawfully hold thoſe provinces, nor exerciſe the powers of the Subahſhip without firſt receiving an authority from the Mogul. And from theſe tranſactions it appears, that, to the obſervation of Mr. Dow, it may be juſtly added, that Meer Jaffier was raiſed to the government of Bengal by the villanies of the Engliſh.

For this horrible tranſaction Col. Clive was rewarded with a jaghire, which produces an annual revenue of thirty thouſand pounds. Let him enjoy it if he can!

By ſubſequent agreements in the ſame and the preceding year, and as conſecutive of that being accompliſhed which had been ſtipulated in the treaty, the lands were ſpecifically mentioned which the Nabob granted; among theſe were the ſalt-petre lands in the whole province of Bahar.

The power of the Eaſt India tyrants being thus reinſtated, ſtrengthened, and extended in Bengal, their affairs were, during this time, reduced to a diſtreſsful ſituation on the Coaſt of Coromandel. Fort St. David's was taken by the French, and Lally, the French General, had inveſted Madras. Had this commander ſucceeded in this enterprize, there can exiſt no doubt, that all the victories in Bengal would have been totally reverſed by forces ſent from Fondicherry to thoſe parts: but happily at this time Admiral Pocock arrived with his Majeſty's fleet, and Col. Draper with the land-forces; the former prevented the French navy, under the command of Monſieur D'Ache, from effecting any ſignal ſervice, and by the latter the ſiege of Madras was raiſed. Theſe ſucceſſes, with the ſubſequent victories, not only re-eſtabliſhed the tottering ſtate of the Eaſt India Company, but laid that foundation on which alone their vaſt acquiſitions have ſince been ſo enormouſly raiſed, and without which the four-and-twenty tyrants would ſcarcely have had exiſtence.

Meer Jaffier was Nabob of Bengal when Mr. Vanſittart arrived to take the government of Calcutta in the year 1760. The affairs of that new ally and of the Company were at that time in no very proſperous ſituation. Many are the inſtances which are brought by Mr. Vanſittart to prove that they were in that ſtate, and to juſtify his conduct. But, in fact, all theſe are founded on this ſole baſis, that the intereſt of the Eaſt India Company required the purſuit of thoſe meaſures which he adopted and eſtabliſhed. How far this is to be conſidered as an adequate juſtification, my readers will determine.

" The army of Meer Jaffier was then at Patna, in " rebellion againſt the Mogul, and he was ſupported " by the Engliſh according to the conditions of the " treaty. The troops of the Nabob were all but in " open rebellion, becauſe they were not paid; and " they threatened to put the Nabob to death. The " Engliſh army was not in a much better condition: " the Nabob was unable to pay the field expences " according to his treaty, and the Engliſh treaſury at

" Calcutta

" Calcutta was ſo much drained, that it was with " difficulty the current expences could be provided. " The Nabob, however, had aſſigned ſome of his " countries for the payment of the ſums which were " due; and, on the reſtoration of the lands, he had " pledged in the Company's hands a quantity of " jewels, which were accepted. But as the Company " would have ſuffered a conſiderable loſs by their alliance " with the Nabob, and a ſtill more intereſting object " for the Engliſh nation in India, the ſucceſs of the " undertaking againſt Pondicherry, which was then " inveſted, depended, in a great meaſure, on a ſup- " ply of money." Every conſideration, but that of the Company's intereſt, was totally diſregarded.

The ſon of Meer Jaffier, who commanded his army, being killed by lightening, and no other to ſucceed him, the Governor and council of Calcutta determined on the perſon who ſhould undertake the adminiſtration of the Nabob's affairs, and ſucceed him in the Subahſhip of the provinces; and in this manner uſurped that right which does, in reality, belong to the Mogul. In this meaſure the Engliſh had no authority to interfere; but the intereſt of the Company bore down every oppoſition, and juſtice was totally unconſidered in the whole tranſaction.

Mr. Vanſittart and the Select Committee were determined to place Coſſim Aly Cawn in the miniſtry of the Nabob's affairs, and to make him his ſucceſſor. This Coſſim had married the only ſurviving legitimate child of Meer Jaffier. And in this reſolution the opinion of Mr. Holwell was followed by the Select Committee. The council were, however, divided in their opinions, though the Committee were not. Mr. Amyatt and Col. Caillaud had written to Meer Jaffier, in favour of his infant grandſon, and that Raja Rejeballah, late Treaſurer to the Nabob's deceaſed ſon, ſhould have the management of affairs during his minority, and the negotiations of each party party were unknown to the other. Such was the ſtate of things when Coſſim Aly Cawn arrived at Calcutta; and as he came with fears and ſuſpicions of the Nabob's diſinclination to him, for the favour already ſhewn him by the Engliſh, it naturally led him to fall in with any meaſures which might be propoſed by them, as a means of ſecuring the continuation of the ſame intereſt in his behalf.

By the treaty made with Meer Jaffier, he was to furniſh the Company's forces with a lack of rupees; (about twelve thouſand pounds a month) but as this was not ſufficient, they diſregarded the expreſs conditions of this ſtipulation, and inſiſted upon a larger ſum, and lands to be conveyed to the Company for that purpoſe. Coſſim Aly Cawn, who was now treacherouſly negotiating with the Select Committee, agreed to cede to the Company lands to the yearly amount of fifty lacks of rupees, upon condition of the Engliſh ſecuring his appointment to the vacant offices of the Nabob's deceaſed ſon, the chief adminiſtration of all the affairs of the government under Meer Jaffier, and the ſucceſſion to the Subahſhip after his death. This was, in fact, immediately to become the Nabob of Bengal.

NUMBER XX.

Jan. 19, 1769.

MEER Jaffier, not willing to ſupplant himſelf in his Subahſhip, by ſtipulating the terms required for Coſſim Aly Cawn, nor to be rendered inſignificant during life, agreed to the propoſition, that his grandſon ſhould ſucceed him. After many councils and tranſactions of the Select Committee, it was reſolved to conclude a treaty with Coſſim Aly Cawn on the following terms.

was

" 1ſt. The Nabob, Meer Jaffier, ſhall continue in " the poſſeſſion of his dignities, and all affairs ſhall be " tranſacted in his name, and a ſuitable income ſhall " be allowed for his expences.

" 2d. The deputy government of the Subahſhip " of Bengal, Azimabad, and Oriſſa, &c. ſhall be con- " ferred by his Excellency the Nabob on Coſſim Aly " Cawn: he ſhall be veſted with the adminiſtration " of all the affairs of the provinces, and after his " Excellency, he ſhall ſucceed to the government.

" 3d. Betwixt us and Coſſim Aly Cawn a firm " friendſhip and union is eſtabliſhed; his enemies are " our enemies, and his friends are our friends.

" 4th. The Europeans and Seapoys of the Engliſh " army ſhall be ready to aſſiſt the Nabob, Coſſim Aly " Cawn, in the management of all affairs, and in all " affairs dependant on him they ſhall exert them- " ſelves to the utmoſt of their abilities.

" 5th. For the charges of the Company, and of " the ſaid army, and proviſions for the field, &c. the " lands of Bardwan, Midnapoor, and Chittayong, " ſhall be aſſigned, and patents for that purpoſe ſhall " be written and granted.

" 6th. The Company is to ſtand to all loſſes, and " receive all the profits of theſe three countries, and " we will demand no more than the three aſſignments " aforeſaid.

" 7th. One half of the lime produced at Silhet, " for three years, ſhall be purchaſed by the agents of " the Company, from the people of the government, " at the cuſtomary rate of that place. The tenants " and inhabitants of that place ſhall receive no in- " jury.

" 10th. The meaſures for war or peace with the " Shah Zada, or the Mogul, and raiſing ſupplies of " money, and the concluding both theſe points, ſhall

" be weighed in the balance of reaſon; and whatever " is judged expedient ſhall be put in execution; and " it ſhall be contrived by our joint councils, that he " be removed from this country, nor ſuffered to get " any footing in it. Whether there be peace with " the Shah Zada, or not, our agreement with Coſſim " Aly Cawn, we will, by the grace of God, inviolably " obſerve, as long as the Engliſh Company's factories " continue in the country." This treaty was ſigned with the Company's ſeal, and by Coſſim Aly Cawn.

In this deteſtable manner the Select Committee, conſiſting of Meſſ. Vanſittart, Caillaud, Sumner, Holwell, and M'Gwire, entered, by treaty, into a conſpiracy againſt their ally, with another abandoned traitor of his Sovereign, and of his father, and in ſupport alſo of a rebellion againſt the Mogul. It is evident alſo, that though by the firſt article of the treaty, Meer Jaffier was to continue in all his dignities; and Coſſim Aly Cawn was to be Deputy Governor; that the Select Committee had forgotten themſelves by the time they came to the fourth, for he is therein ſtiled the Nabob; and thus the firſt is confeſſedly colluſive and untrue; and yet all theſe enormities were to be tranſacted by the grace of God.

This treaty being concluded, the traitor, Coſſim Aly Cawn, ſet out for Moorſhedabad, and within two days Mr. Vanſittart and Col. Caillaud followed him, to perſuade the Nabob to comply with theſe oppreſſive and indignant terms of his ſubject. But the Select Committee concluding that they would be rejected, diſpatched after them the powerful arguments of " two complete companies of military, a " company of artillery with four pieces of cannon, " and Capt. Tably's battalion of ſeapoys; and this " detachment was inſidiouſly repreſented to the Na- " bob, as deſigned to reinforce the army at Patna."

In anſwer to the letter of the Select Committee, acquainting him with what they had reſolved, the Governor

Governor replied, " I have great hopes I ſhall be " able to obtain the propoſed advantages for the " Company: obtain them, indeed, I will at all events; " but I hope, and much wiſh, to get it done with- " out exerting any force.

" Mr. Vanſittart and Col. Caillaud, upon con- " verſation with Meer Jaffier, diſcovered that he " never would conſent, without ſome degree of force, " to give Coſſim Aly Cawn the means of reſtoring " order to his affairs;" that is, by a voluntary re- ſignation of all authority into the hands of his traitor.

" Coſſim Aly Cawn alſo was extremely apprehen- " ſive that the Nabob, inſtead of entruſting him with " his affairs, would endeavour to get rid of him." And this opinion was juſtly founded on the conſciouſ- neſs of his guilt; it was what he righteouſly deſerved, what the Nabob ought to have executed, and a million pities that it was not effected.

It was now determinded to depoſe Meer Jaffier, and to place in his ſeat the rebel Coſſim Aly Cawn; and in order to aggravate this reſolution of treaſon and breach of faith, the deed was to be attended with an act of ſacrilege, according to the religion of the Gentoos. " The night which was to conclude the " Gentoo feaſt, when all the people of that caſt " would be pretty well fatigued with their cere- " monies, was preferred before all others for the ex- " ecution of this deſign; it was determined there- " fore, that Col. Caillaud, with two companies of " military, and ſix companies of ſeapoys, ſhould " croſs the river between three and four in the morn- " ing; and having joined Coſſim Aly Cawn, and his " people, march to the Nabob's palace, and ſurround " it juſt at day-break; and being extremely deſirous " to prevent any diſturbance and bloodſhed, the Go- " vernor wrote a letter to the Nabob. Meaſures " were at the ſame time taken for ſeizing the perſons " of Koonram, Monelol, and Checon, their intention

" being only to remove thoſe three unworthy Mini-
" ſters, and place Coſſim Aly Cawn in the full ma" nagement of all the affairs, in quality of deputy
" and ſucceſſor to the Nabob.

" The neceſſary preparations being made, the Co" lonel joined Coſſim Aly Cawn, and marched into the " court-yard of the palace. The gates of the inner
" court being ſhut, the Colonel formed his men,
" and ſent the Governor's letter to the Nabob, who " was at firſt in great rage, and long threatened he " would make what reſiſtance he could, and take his " fate. At length, after many meſſages, by means " of Mr. Haſtings and Mr. Luſhington, the Nabob
" finding his perſiſting was to no purpoſe, ſent a meſ-
" ſage to Coſſim Aly Cawn, that he was ready to ſend
" him the ſeals, and all the enſigns of dignity, and " to order the nobit (or band of muſic, allowed to " none but Princes) to be ſtruck up in his name,
" provided he would agree to take the whole charge
" of the government upon him, to diſcharge all the " arrears due to the troops, to pay the uſual revenues
" to the King (or the Mogul) to ſave his life and " honour, and to give an allowance ſufficient for his " maintenance. All theſe conditions being agreed
" to, Coſſim Aly Cawn was proclaimed." And thus, inſtead of being Deputy, as mentioned in the firſt article of the treaty, he was made Nabob, according to the fourth.

In this manner the law of nations, the faith of treaties, the honour of the Engliſh, and the dignities of human kind, were again inſidiouſly violated to depoſe a prince in their alliance, and to place a traitor on his throne. And all this was perpetrated becauſe the Eaſt India Company would have ſuffered a conſiderable loſs by their alliance with the Nabob.

Meer Jaffier came to the Colonel, declaring that he depended on him for his life. " Notice was then
" ſent to the Governor, and he came immediately.

" The

" The old Nabob met him, and aſked him if his " perſon was ſafe. The Governor told him, not " only his perſon was ſafe, but his government too " if he pleaſed, of which it was never intended to " deprive him." Meer Jaffier gave no credit to this declaration, for Coſſim Aly Cawn was declared Nabob. He ſaid, " that he had no more buſineſs at " the city, that he ſhould be in continual danger of " Coſſim Aly Cawn, and deſired permiſſion to live " at Calcutta. Coſſim Aly Cawn was then ſeated on " the throne, and the Governor and the reſt paid him " congratulations in the uſual form.

" The advantages to the Company were great " indeed.

" The grants under the great ſeal of the countries " of Bardwan, Midnapoor, and Chittayong, were " immediately received, as well as that for the lime-" productions at Silhet. A very ſevere order was " iſſued, forbidding all the bankers and merchants to " refuſe the Calcutta rupees, or to aſk any exchange " on them. A ſupply of money was ſent with the " Colonel for the payment of the troops at Patna, " and a preſent of three or four lacks of rupees, " beſides, was expected to be ſent down to Calcutta, " to help out the Company in their preſent occaſions, " here and at Madras, and the former balance was to " be paid monthly, according to the old Nabob's " agreement."

Can it be denied that theſe lands were won by conqueſt, when the treaty by which they were granted, previous to the depoſing of Meer Jaffier, was ſtipulated on the expreſs terms of acquiring them by arms? and the old Nabob was inſidiouſly reduced by military force in his own palace, to ſurrender all his power and his dominions into the hands of a rebellious ſubject, whom the Select Committee had treacherouſly pledged themſelves, by the grace of God, to ſupport and enthrone. Theſe lands, therefore, are undeniably the property of his Majeſty, according to the expreſs conditions of that very charter by which the four-and-twenty tyrants ſtill dare illegally to retain them.

Meer Jaffier, that very night, ſet out towards Calcutta, where he and his concubines were well received, and maintained at the expence of Coſſim Aly Cawn. And in this manner a revolution was effected, in one inſtance, like that in England: the ſon-in-law and daughter aſcended the throne of the father; and in moſt others like that which had been accompliſhed in the dethroning Serajah Dowla. In this tranſaction, however, there was no bloodſhed nor Nabob murdered; and thoſe were ſolely owing to the non-reſiſtance of Meer Jaffier, for the Governor had determined to obtain it all events. This relation is taken from the narrative of Mr. Vanſittart; and by that publication he proves that he was ſolicitous to promote the intereſts of the Company alone, whatever might be the reflections which he might incur for violating the laws of the Almighty and of human kind.

This will be the national expence and loſs, ſhould the Company be ſuffered to exiſt till the end of their charter —		54,216,540

Such are the enormous expence and loſs which this nation hath gradually incurred ſince the commencement of this Eaſt-India Company, to the end of the year 1768, and will ſuffer ſhould they be permitted to continue till the expiration of the charter. This grievous oppreſſion, my countrymen, we have born for the ſupport of a trade conſiſting of a capital of 3,200,000 l. only, and which has been dividing at all times 6 per cent. or more, and from the hands of tyrants, excluding their fellow-ſubjects from their undoubted doubted rights, liberties, and commercial privileges, exerting arbitrary power, dethroning Princes who had infracted no law of nations or of nature, retaining their Sovereign's indiſputable property, and bidding avowed defiance to the legiſlature.

It is eaſy to be diſcerned, that the preceding account might be greatly encreaſed by juſt charges, by adding intereſt upon intereſt in their method of reckoning. And ſince the labouring ſubjects are the genuine riches of this kingdom, it might be augmented in the number of men, whoſe labour has been loſt to the nation. In ſuch employments every man engaged is a robber of the public weal: wherefore, not only the preceding thouſands, but every individual employed in that commerce is a public loſs; and, in this view, to what would then your expences amount?

The Aſiatic trade has at all times been diſadvantageous to the ſtate; and it would have been a patriotic act, long ſince, to have ſuppreſſed it; but luxury encreaſing with ſuch wide and rapid violence, has rendered the commodities of the Eaſt to be ranked among the neceſſaries of life. And as voluptuouſneſs will know no controul, but find the means for indulging her ſenſuality, thoſe commodities will be procured from other nations, and the evil will nevertheleſs prevail. On this account it has been thought more proper to permit that commerce to be carried on by Engliſh ſubjects, than to receive the like productions at more expence from other maritime ſtates.

But ſhall this tyrannic Company, whoſe produce hath tempted you to a vicious indulgence, be raiſed to Sovereigns by the vices they have created? Shall the oppreſſion we have born, the treaſures we have loſt, the blood we have ſpilt in acquiring dominions in Aſia, be all converted to the aggrandiſement and tyranny of a ſet of men, many of whom, from dirt itſelf, have ſo ſuddenly riſen by fraud, by rapine, and by murder, into the exaltation of princely fortunes, that, aſtoniſhed with their aſcent, their heads are turned, turned, and they treat their Sovereign with contempt? Even the riches they have brought to this realm are a curſe to the community. Miſtaking extravagance for liberality, and willing to obliterate the imputation of all kind of criminality by prodigality, they care not at what prices they purchaſe the neceſſaries of life; and thus advancing them on the poor and induſtrious, extend that oppreſſion into England which they exerciſed with ſuch cruelty in India. Are ſuch men the proper repreſentatives of a free people? No: let the nation univerſally enjoy the advantages, which even their vices can produce, and which their courage and their ſufferings deſerve; and wreſt the iron ſceptre from the hands of theſe imperious, low-born oligarchs.

Beſides the preceding articles which are omitted in the account, there is nothing eſtimated for the land and naval forces in the King's ſervice, which have been employed in wars anterior to the laſt. Should all theſe particulars be added to the preceding ſum, to what exceſs would it not amount? But there is already more than ſufficient to excite one univerſal deteſtation againſt theſe inſolent uſurpers; your repreſentatives will not permit theſe audacious ſubjects to diſpute their Sovereign's property with himſelf and the legiſlature: they will not ſuffer ſuch indignities to be ſo confidently offered to themſelves without a juſt reſentment for ſuch unprecedented inſolence. Will they protract the extirpation of the people's oppreſſions, retard the ſalvation of the kingdom, and ratify the uſurpation and power of four-and-twenty tyrants? If they are Britons, they will not forget their country's cauſe, their Sovereign's dignity and right, and their own honour and happineſs.

P. S. To-morrow the account of the vaſt advantages which the Company muſt acquire by retaining the lands, and the injuries which the King and nation muſt ſuffer by permitting them.

NUMBER XXII.

Jan. 21, 1769.

THE account ſtated in the preceding paper is ſuch as cannot be reaſonably objected to, I will now conſider it in a comparative view, which may ſerve to illuſtrate the ſubject.

The annual intereſt on 39,526,200l. the loſs and expence which the nation hath ſuffered to the preſent time, is ———	1,185,786
The value of Engliſh and other commodities annually exported — —	780,771
Deduct the latter from the former, and the intereſt exceeds the exports by —		405,015
Duties on Eaſt India goods annually imported on a medium of 10 years —	538,732
Deduct the 5 per cent. paid to the Company, for the ſupport of Ambaſſadors, &c. on 3,200,000l. ——	160,000	378,732
Intereſt of expence exceeds the duties by —		807,054

On 4,200,000l. borrowed by government, according to the loſs the nation has already ſuſtained, there is paid upwards of 28 per cent. excluſive of the three per cent. which is paid on the ſum of 4,200,000 l.

Beſides the preceding particulars, the duties paid to government are leſſened by the drawbacks on Eaſt-India goods exported, which cannot be eſtimated, becauſe there is no ſeparate account of them kept at the Cuſtom-Houſe.

A State

A State of the affairs of the East-India Company, relative to the Asiatic revenues and commerce.

The territories, acquired in Bengal, are allowed by the Company to produce annually, free of all expences	1,300,000
The territories lately acquired in the Myſore and Carnatic countries, will produce a clear 2,000,000l. annually; but let it be eſtimated at — —	1,700,000
		3,000,000
The merchandize in foreign and Engliſh commodities, annually exported to the Eaſt-Indies, on a medium of 12 years, as delivered into parliament is —	820,556
The bullion, on a medium of 3 years before the year 1758, and when the trade was on the old footing —	636,435
		1,456,991
The preceding ſum of 1,456,991l. annually exported, paid all the expences of the fleets, armies, factories, and ſervants in the Company's ſervice, both in England and Aſia, and there remained a clear profit on the trade —— ——	400,000
Since the acquiſition of the Bengal dominions, the revenues of theſe lands have ſupplied the bullion, or will do

do it, ſo that there is more exported. That ſum is inveſted in goods in Aſia, and brought home to England, and may be conſidered as clear profits, becauſe it is a clear produce ——	636,435
The expence of the army being paid by the revenues of Bengal, and 1,300,000l. of that revenue remaining clear after all expences. By this alteration, the Company not only ſave that charge on their trade, but inveſt that expence in goods alſo: and this, at the loweſt eſtimate is —	450,000
Hence it appears, that the Company can eaſily inveſt 1,086,435l. annually in India commodities, which will produce in England, together with the old profits of 400,000l. to be yearly divided, the ſum of ——		1,486,435
And this ſum of 1,486,435l. will be returned as above, on an export of the merchandize only, which is 820,556l. and that will be the whole capital which is neceſſary to carry on their trade annually for the future.
Thus the money inveſted in goods, amounting to —	1,086,435
The clear revenues to —	3,000,000
The profits according to the old eſtimate —	400,000
Are —— —— ——		4,486,435

But as the bullion of the Aſiatic revenues is inveſted in the place of the bullion formerly exported, that ſum is to be conſidered as part of the clear revenues, and 636,435l. is to be deducted from the 4,486,435l. ——	636,435
	3,850,000
From this ſum of 3,850,000l. deduct the ſums inveſted in India, and brought home to England — —	1,086,435
There will then remain in India —	3,850,000
Should the Company be permitted to continue their trade on the payment of 400,000l. yearly, that ſum muſt be deducted from the money brought home by inveſtments, and gotten by profits, which being 1,486,435l. there will then annually ariſe to the Company in England a clear product of — —	1,086,435

The remainder in India of 3,850,000l. is to be employed as the Company may pleaſe.

The difficulties which at preſent apparently embarraſs the Company in the payment of the 400,000l. are ſuch as have ariſen in part from their miſmanagement, but chiefly from a premeditated deſign, in order to have the pretext of offering objections to the paying any larger ſum to government, and by theſe means to obtain their purſuits on the payment of that ſum for the future. But as all theſe difficulties will be certainly removed as ſoon as they think fit, the power of that removal being in their own hands, their affairs muſt then be eſtabliſhed in the preceding manner.

Such are the loſs and expence which the nation has ſuſtained by the Eaſt-India Company, as ſtated in the
